STATE OBTAINS 20-STORY OFFICE BLDG. IN DETROIT

LANSING — Auditor General Vernon J. Brown has announced state acquisition of the 20-story Cadillac Square Building in Detroit, valued at approximately $377,000, for use of state offices in the Metropolitan area. The property will be acquired by exchanging unsalable tax-reverted lands of equal value in Wayne and Oakland counties, Brown explained, with no cash involved.

PICKLE NEWS

By H. E. Brumm, Dist. Mgr. H. J. Heinz Company Charlevoix, Mich.

As soon as the pickle seedling is out of the ground cultivation should be started. Care is necessary not to allow soil to be rolled over on top of the growing seedlings. The ground between the rows should be worked often enough to prevent it crusting over; to conserve soil moisture; as well as to destroy weeds. The first cultivation may be fairly deep if guards are used to protect the plants from being covered up. Subsequent cultivation should become shallower as the roots develop. To disturb or cut off roots by deep cultivation stunts the vine growth and tends to lower the yield.

The top soil should be stirred after a rain to prevent the formation of a crust on the surface of the soil. If this crust is allowed to form and remain during the hot sunshiny days of summer, moisture rapidly escapes from the soil. To conserve this soil-moisture cultivate shallowly to break up this crust. A shallow, loose soil mulch on the surface stops the escape of moisture and you will notice moist dirt immediately below this mulch. Deep cultivation at this time is destructive of much moisture from the soil as it dries out as far down as it is stirred.

Hormone Gives Hope of Building Up Some Dwarfs

BERKELEY, CALIF.—Isolation in the pure state of the growth hormone, a step that gives hope of adding stature in extreme cases of dwarfism, was announced by the University of California.

Dr. Herbert M. Evans, director of the institute of experimental biology, who, with Dr. Choh Hao Li, research associate, had obtained the substance from beef pituitaries, said that the hormone would be too expensive to use except in extreme individual cases, as the process of isolation is long and tedious.

Dr. Li, who disclosed that hormone injections had produced growth in rats which had stopped growing, said that use of the hormone might influence the growth of older human dwarfs as well as young ones.

7,000,000 British Women Actively Engaged in War

Opening a rest home for women workers at Tadworth, Surrey, which was built with donations from American war workers, Bevin said that $525,000 was contributed in the U. S. in 1943 to build British rest homes.

Better Bass Fishing Is In Prospect

LANSING—Hook-and-line fishermen should have better-than-ordinary luck with the opening of the bass and bluegill season June 25th, according to conservation department fish authorities.

Department spokesmen, however, are even more happy to report that recent warmer-than-normal temperatures should have advanced the hatching of bass and bluegill spawn, with consequent likelihood that spawning fish may be off the beds, except in northern lakes, by the opening day of the panfish season.

Factors which should have contributed to increased panfish populations in Michigan lakes, according to department authorities, were relatively high temperature levels of the last winter and consequent reduction in "winter kill" of fish which die from lack of oxygen in water when heavy ice and snow surfaces on lakes shut off the sun's rays, the present relatively higher lake levels, and the fact that war's restrictions have limited fishing in recent seasons.

"Swifts" Not "Swallows" Invaded Manistee Home

LANSING—Invasion of a Manistee home by hundreds of birds, commonly known as swallows, which flew down the chimney during the owners' absence, is a story that is being reprinted by newspapers in other states.

Conservation department ornithologists supply some interesting facts about the birds. Scientists call them swifts, or chimney swifts, not swallows. The birds that invaded the Manistee home were flying north from their winter quarters. Whereabouts of their winter feeding places is unknown, although the birds are believed to spend the winter months in the great unexplored forests of Brazil. They range northward to lower Canada in summer, when they build their nests and rear their young.

The swifts roost and nest in chimneys which afford shelter from winds. They are weak-footed birds whose weight is supported when roosting by the denuded tips of quills in their tails and they must seek shelter from the elements lest winds overcome the weak clutch of their claws.

Swifts' nests are made of small twigs, cemented together by salivary fluid, and, in fact, the birds are related to the species whose nests are highly esteemed by the Chinese as the basis of soup stock.

The swifts are possibly the fastest flying birds that visit Michigan. There are no official records of the speeds they attain, but related species, found in India, have been clocked at speeds in excess of 175 miles an hour.

Better Deer Hunting For 1944

LANSING—Even better deer hunting may be enjoyed in Michigan next fall than was the case last November when a record kill of 65,087 was tabulated by the conservation department's game division.

A Detroit sportsmen's group, inquiring about prospects for the coming season, has been informed by a department authority that "deer came through one of the lightest winters in years with negligible starvation losses in both peninsulas, and reports this spring indicate a better winter survival than we have had in a long time.

"Last year's buck fawns that have come through the winter in such good shape should produce a big crop of bucks for this coming fall. Other things being equal, hunting next fall should be as good or better than last year."

Permits Must Be Obtained To Shoot Robins

LANSING—There is a legal way to shoot robins that are destroying cherries, according to the conservation department, but the illegal way can be very expensive indeed.

Shooting robins, bluebirds, catbirds, woodpeckers, and other song and insectivorous birds, with BB guns, air rifles, or other weapons, is a federal offense bringing a maximum sentence of $500 in fines, six months in jail, or both. State law provides fines of not more than $100 or jail sentences not exceeding 90 days.

Permission to shoot robins that are destroying crops is sometimes given by the United States game management agent for Michigan (Stephen Creech, 318 Federal Bldg., Bay City), and by the state department of conservation. Both permits are required.

Both agencies conduct their own investigations of complaints before issuing permits.

Fourteen fish hatcheries, 13 trout rearing stations, and eight major bass and bluegill rearing ponds are maintained by the conservation department to produce game fish for stocking waters over which the state exercises jurisdiction.

Marquette County, which has the largest number of lakes of any Michigan County, has only 2.5 per cent of its total area covered by lakes. This is only slightly greater than the average for all counties, which is approximately two per cent.

BOY SCOUT NEWS

Camp more in '44 is the big idea among Scouts and Leaders in the Scenic Trails Council this summer. Camp announcements have gone to Scouts of the Council announcing the summer camp program.

The first Council Camp project is a historical camp on Mackinac Island from July 1st to 8th. Thirty-two Scouts and three leaders are making up this trip. Each day a hike to some spot of historical interest on the Island will be on the program. One day during the week, a boat trip to the Snow Islands is on the schedule.

The second camp project will be the Council's participation in a Conservation Camp at Higgin's Lake. This is designed for Senior Scouts 15 years of age and over who will spend half of each day working with members of the Conservation Department on special conservation projects.

Pioneer Camp, to be held at Camp Ticrilick 13 miles south and east of Traverse City is scheduled for two one-week periods beginning August 13th. This will be the major camp event of the season with an anticipated attendance of between 150 and 200 boys each week. Many special features have been added to Pioneer Camp.

From August 27th to 30th members of the Council's honor campers group, the Order of the Arrow, will participate in a Northern Michigan canoe trip. This trip will be in charge of Buck Rogers, Field Executive of the Council. Many other activities such as Camporees and Troop Camps have been designed to give every Scout in the Council an opportunity to accumulate at least 10 days of camp experience during 1944. Several troops have already camped in excess of 10 days this year. Scouts have been urged by Council Camping Committee officers to make reservations for their choice of these camps as soon as possible so that food purchases and other supplies can be made.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

Vigorous opposition to home rule for Wayne County, likely to be a constitutional amendment for the November general election, is indicated from upstate rural areas.

Next Tuesday, June 20th, the Michigan Institute for Local Government, headed by State Treasurer D. Hale Brake and made up of state leaders of county officials, will be asked to take a definite stand on the issue. Other propositions before the institute, which was founded only a few months ago, will be the three proposed constitutional amendments designed to divert one-third of the state sales tax revenues to local governments: Municipalities, townships, counties and schools.

At a meeting of the institute's executive committee last week, to which the press was admitted, Melvin McPherson, acting as spokesman for the township supervisors, advocated that the institute go on record by committee action, condemning the Wayne County home rule plan. Action was deferred until June 20th in order to give the entire membership an opportunity to weigh arguments. However, sympathy with the anti-home-rule viewpoint was generally expressed last week.

State Treasurer Brake, who is chairman of the state tax study advisory committee, reported that the committee would complete its study within 60 days but that no recommendation was possible by Monday, June 19, date for the special session of the state legislature.

He warned county officials flatly that adoption of the sales tax amendments would automatically invoke a crisis in state finances, resulting in alternatives of reducing vital public services of state government or increasing state taxes — referring obviously to the state sales tax itself.

It is Brake's belief that the institute should take a stand on this and any issue that involves the welfare of local governments, regardless of whether it is or may become controversial among public officials and the public. This attitude is shared by many others, including Mr. McPherson who, sought to have the Institute endorse the township supervisors' official resolution with respect to opposition to Wayne County home rule.

Fearful that the Institute might become another "pressure group" or "super lobby" at Lansing, the institute's public relations committee has recommended that the Institute should not become involved in legislative or political issues and should confine its functions to that of a "clearing house for the exchange of ideas and information between its members to the end that through open discussion a better understanding of the problems of local government may be acquired by its members."

The committee submitted recommendations, both of which were approved, whereby the Institute would sponsor training courses to be held late in the year at Michigan State College and would emphasize educational study through loan of technical books and literature by the Michigan State Library, Lansing.

This information and educational function, however, is not enough in the minds of many county officials who look upon the institute as a defender of their interests and hence an agency to be utilized to favor or oppose legislation or political issues that are in their sincere judgment, inimical to the welfare of local governments.

Signing the report were four of the five committee members who participated in policy discussions: Albert Blashfield, secretary, Michigan State Bar, as chairman William Nestle, Ithaca, president of the Michigan Sheriff's Association; Allan M. William, Ionia County road commission, and Gene Alleman, secretary, Michigan Press Association.

Michigan's land boom, a result of war inflation, may bring headaches to many investors, in the opinion of the agricultural committee of the Michigan State Planning Commission, unless the land is utilized according to its potential use.

At a recent meeting of the commission, authorities of Michigan State College reported that a land use map has been compiled for each county in Michigan and that a copy is available at the office of the local county agricultural agent.

These maps show the location of lands not now in farms and not suitable for farm use, as well as the location of existing farms that are not recommended for continuation in farm use.

"Before you buy farm lands, consult the county land use map" is the commission's advice. If it were heeded, many investors will avoid needless grief and save many dollars.

SPEBSQSA ENTERTAINS BOYNE CITY CHAPTER

In spite of wet weather, members of Boyne City's chapter of the S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. gathered in fair number at the home of Dr. Douglas C. Nettleton last Friday evening, an invitation from the local chapter for a get-together session, the occasion being the regular monthly meeting night of the Charlevoix "Barber Shop" Singers.

The program, under the direction of a committee composed of Fred Tyler, chairman and M.C.; Dr. Gilbert Saltonstall and Charles Duerr, consisted of several numbers by the Boyne City Melodiers (the Bradley sisters and Miss Georgia Hall), the Charlevoices, Deano and Mona Davenport, the Misses Sally Miller and Audrey Byers, the Tunetwisters, the Boyne City Chord Busters, the Chic Sales Four, the Inverted Quartet, and last, but not least, the Nineteenth Hole, or Golfers' Quartet, consisting of Dr. Nettleton, Glenroy Ikens, Frank Poole and Charles Hamlin. This was the original quartet that started off "this barber shop business" in Charlevoix on the north side golf links, some years ago.

SWIMMING TEACHERS' SCHOOL AT WALLOON

The Charlevoix County Chapter of the American Red Cross will act as host chapter to a Water Safety Instructor Aquatic School to be held at Camp Vahalla on Walloon Lake July 3rd to 8th. Candidates for this school must be 18, in good physical health and good swimmers. Six men or women from Charlevoix County will be sent to this school with all expenses paid and those interested in taking this course are asked to contact George Hemingway at the Charlevoix County Nurseries or Mrs. Krieghoff at the Citizen office in Boyne City.

The object of the school is to provide instructors for swimming classes to be given during the summer. Young men who will be inducted into the service in the fall are eligible inasmuch as the army and navy are making swimming and rescue work an important part of their training. Those wishing this instruction must register at once as a list of students must be compiled in the next two weeks.

Boys and girls 18 and over — here is your opportunity to spend a week at a most enjoyable camp with your expenses paid. An expert instructor will be in charge and the training you will receive will be of great value. Make your application now.

CAMP CHARLEVOIX TO OPEN ON JUNE 30

Camp Charlevoix, a private camp for boys, will open its 18th season on Lake Charlevoix, June 30th, according to Lewis C. Reimann, owner and director. Ninety boys and a staff of college men will gather at the camp for eight weeks of training which will include instruction in rifle shooting, swimming and life-saving under Red Cross experts, riding with a western cowboy as instructor, physical fitness under the guidance of Charles Bachman, football coach at Michigan State College, coaching in all sports and in sailing, ceramics and handicraft and dramatics.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES TO MEET

The biennial meeting of the general council of Congregational Christian churches in America will be held June 21-28 in the First Park Congregational Church of Grand Rapids, Michigan, under the general theme, "The Church and the Post-War World."

The matter of ministering to returning service men in cooperation with other community-building agencies will be given a first place on the program. Capt. Leslie D. Shapton Navigates Bomber, India and Return, 142 Hours Flying Time

(The following, taken from a recent issue of The Commercial Appeal (Memphis, Tenn.), is an account of one trip of the Fourth Ferrying Group told by Captain Leslie Shapton of Charlevoix, to Robert Talley. This group is based in Memphis. Photograph is by Pfc. Charles J. Francis.

(By Robert Talley)

With Colonel Johnson, as alternate pilot, went Maj. Lane W. Smith of Cincinnati, assistant director of the Ferrying Division's training program, and a former commercial air lines pilot with more than 6000 hours to his credit. Major Smith wanted to check up on the Ferrying Division's work abroad, and especially of the route to India.

Others on the trip, all from the Fourth Ferrying Group were Capt. Leslie Shapton, navigator, veteran of 15 crossings of the Atlantic and Pacific; Capt. Russell A. Gohring, public relations officer; Master Sergt. James F. Patton, flight engineer; Tech. Sergt. Richard J. Barrett Jr., radio operator who served in a similar capacity on Wendell Willkie's round-the-world tour, and Pfc. Charles J. Francis, photographer.

Thay're Off!

The skies were clear, boding a good voyage, when the big four-engined C-87 transport (a big B-24 Liberator bomber, converted for cargo and passengers), containing the seven world travelers, roared down the mile-long runway at Memphis Airport and took off into the southeastern skies at 1:30 p. m. on Tuesday, February 1. That night they slept in Miami, poised for the flight across the Caribbean to the east coast of South America.

At Miami next day all the seats in the plane except two were removed and the big ship loaded with vital military cargo. The huge doughnut-shaped tires sagged under their gross load of over 50,000 pounds, or 25 tons.

While Colonel Johnson and Maj. Smith alternated at the controls, the big transport soared away from Miami on the morning of February 3 and headed out over the blue waters of the Caribbean, dotted with tropical isles upon which crystal beaches glistened and the palm trees nodded in the warm wind.

Mountains of Africa Like "Lost World"

Borinquen Field in Porto Rico, where the fliers landed in the middle of the afternoon, was the next stop. Then they continued on, flying over Devil's Island, the famed old French penal colony, to Atkinson Field in British Guiana where the ship was again checked and refueled by Army Air Force ground crews. Here they again checked the "jungle packs" attached to their parachutes — containing long bolo knives for hacking tropical vegetation, emergency ration, waterproof matches, first-aid equipment and such things as lines and bait for fishing in jungle streams — for the trackless jungles of the Amazon lay ahead.

Approaching Belem, Brazil, they flew over the mouth of the world's greatest river, more than 100 miles wide as it rushed into the sea. At Belem they saw a miracle that the Army's Air Transport Command had accomplished — a modern air field carved out of the leafy jungle, with multiple hard-surfaced runways, taxiing space for the biggest planes, broad ramps and modern repair shops and hangars, plus comfortable accommodations for overnight lodging and meals. This sight was to be repeated many times on the long journey to India.

Instead of flying the fighter plane route, via Ascension Island, the air travelers from Memphis decided to span the South Atlantic in one hop. It was 4 a. m. when they took off from Natal's aid field. For 10 hours and 25 minutes they soared across the broad Atlantic as the star-lit night yielded to the rosy flush of dawn hundreds of miles out at sea and the forenoon wore on. The two pilots, navigator and radio operator were busy, but during much of the time the others aboard napped in the plane's two seats or on blankets on the floor. They flew at 8000 to 9000 feet, and the weather was ideal.

In the early afternoon the west coast of Africa loomed through the haze and the big transport swept in from the sea as it circled Dakar, the gateway to Africa at the continent's westernmost point, and landed at an air field on the city's outskirts. Captain Shapton's expert navigating had hit Dakar almost right on the nose.

"A high wind was blowing and sand was pelting all around us as we stepped from the plane," said Captain Shapton. "All around us natives, wearing long garments that look quite a bit like old-fashioned nightgowns were working on the field, laying stones along the borders of the road, doing carpentry and other jobs. Here, as elsewhere along the route, the Army Air Force was on the job, with long runways, shops and hangars and buildings."

It was in the malaria country, and among the first objects that met the travelers' eyes at the airfield was a large sign reading: "All personnel permanent and transient at this base after the hour of 1800 are required to wear long-sleeved shirts fully buttoned, tie, mosquito boots or leggins and headpiece. By order of the Commanding Officer."

"We soon found what that meant," said Captain Shapton. "That afternoon every man in our party had to go into the small chapel and listen to a medical officer's talk on malaria prevention.

ONE OF OLDEST CHARLEVOIX STORES CHANGES HANDS

Excellently Equipped Grocery And Meat Market Will Retain Its Old Name

One of the oldest, and yet one of the most modern businesses in Charlevoix changed hands this past week when Harold Dutcher and Earl Johnson took over the business of the Martin Block (Associated Grocers) Grocery and Meat Market on the east side of Bridge Street near the bridge.

The store, a modern two-story brick structure, open its entire length to breezes from Lake Michigan and Round Lake, is one of the coolest places in town to shop. The grocery department is equipped with a fine electric vegetable cooler and an electric refrigerated case in which all dairy products are kept at just the right temperature. In the meat department, besides the usual excellent cooler will be found an electric meat-slicer, two electric meat grinders, an electric chicken picker that turns out a job which will delight the most exacting housewife, and

LARGEST CROP ON RECORD IS THE OUTLOOK FOR '44

1500 TONS TO BE HARVESTED SAYS SURVEY

$230,000 Will Be Paid to Growers With $60,000 Going To 1400 Pickers

"A complete survey has been made of 32 commercial cherry orchards in Charlevoix County," says B. C. Mellencamp, county agricultural agent. "These visits disclosed the fact that growers look forward to the largest crop on record. A total of 41,000 sour cherry trees and 2,100 sweet cherry trees are well-loaded with fruit."

"Based on 75 pounds of cherries per tree," declares Mr. Mellencamp, "it is expected that 1500 tons will be harvested. Based on the above estimates, it is believed that around $230,000 will be paid to growers for this year's crop, and of this $230,000, approximately $60,000 will be paid to pickers. Charlevoix County is exceptionally fortunate in that we have such a profitable fruit industry. The least we can do is to band together and see that this crop is harvested. Don't forget the prices paid for picking will be such that a good picker can earn approximately $5.00 a day. Every person is urged to help in this harvest."

All agencies are working together to do all they can to make possible gasoline and tires for transporting pickers, tents and cots for pickers so they can live at the orchards. The OPA has already approved the allotment of gas for the transportation of workers for the cherry harvest.

OPA LOWERS FISH PRICE

WASHINGTON—The OPA announces reductions in the ceiling prices of fish which it says should cut the price to the public one to three cents per pound.

RED CROSS ACTIVITIES

D-Day has come, bringing wounds and death to thousands of our men and the demand for surgical dressings is greater than ever. Every wound must be dressed — not just some wounds, or certain wounds, but all wounds, large or small, must be dressed, and dressed often.

The War Department has asked the Red Cross for monthly shipments of one hundred million surgical dressings. That means more than a billion dressings must be folded this year. Chapters in the Midwestern area must provide thirty million of these monthly. Charlevoix County's quota is 27,000 4x4s and 7,200 4x8s of which Charlevoix must fold 9,000 of the former and 2,700 of the latter.

The need for these dressings is immediate. New quotas will arrive each month from now on so the dressings on hand must be completed as soon as possible. The War Department tells us that each soldier who is wounded must have at least a thousand dressings. With the casualty list from the European area alone listed in the news one can readily see how many dressings must be completed and rushed to the battle zones.

Mrs. F. F. McMillan, local chairman, asks that everyone give some time to the new quota. This is everybody's war — more than 500 Charlevoix boys are in the service

NEWS ITEMS FROM THOSE IN OUR FRONT-LINE SERVICES

From Eddie Stinson—

Somewhere in India
June 7, 1944

Dear Editor: My address has changed again. You are probably tired of changing the address on my paper so often, but neither of us can help that. Today was the first time I have received a paper since I left the States. While you were slaving away to get our paper to us I was taking sun baths on deck. You can bet your life I won't trade places; at least not until after the war. We had a swell trip over and I had to land in the hospital. It has its advantages, though. We had food three times a day instead of twice — and mattresses, and, last but not least, we had the good care of some swell nurses.

I am working night shift now and am at liberty to go into town whenever I am not on duty. Our dog tags are our passes.

India isn't what the movies picture it. The movies show the Indians with turbans and nice white clothes wrapped around their bodies. They "forget" to show the thousands of beggars that are always asking for handouts from soldiers. It would seem funny to see 15 or 20 cows in the streets of Charlevoix, but it is an everyday occurance here. We even have to chase them off the porch of our barracks. The Indians make little patties out of cow manure and press it against the side of their mud huts to dry. Each patty is about 6 inches across and has an imprint of the maker's hand in it. They use it for fuel to cook with. (Enclosed is a photograph to prove it.)

Editor's Note—Eddie's photo shows the patties with their handprints all right. And, Eddie, if you get a chance to see a cobra and a mongoose fight, it's worth

Beaver Island And 'Bust'

(By David Hamilton, Scribe of Troop 11)

Saturday, June 3rd, at 9:08, 24 brave Boy Scouts sailed out of Charlevoix Harbor into a choppy Lake Michigan. About 1:15, 24 wobbly-kneed and sea-sick little boys stepped onto the dock at St. James. By 2:15 we were setting up camp on Big Sand Bay across the road from Lloyd McDonough's farm. After most of the cabin afternoon was spent setting up camp, some of the boys played baseball in the pasture across the road. But after a supper of Hamburgers and Creamed String Beans and Onions, we were all ready to hit the hay without any arguments at 9:30. Bob Carey, the Troop Bugler, blew Taps with Warren Shadko as echo.

Sunday, June 4th, 7 Catholic Scouts started their 5-mile hike to Holy Cross Parish Church at 6 o'clock. They were back in time for breakfast and inspection at 9 o'clock. (Inspection was counted on Clean Hands, Face, Combed Hair, Clean Storage box and Clean and Neat Tents.) 1st Patrol (Rattlesnake) was Second with Two Points against them. 2nd (Cobra) had three points against them. Breakfast was Cornflakes, Cocoa, and Toast. The Protestant Scouts had their services on the Beach at 10:15. Tenderfoot members passed Tracking, Cooking, and Firebuilding while the rest of the boys played a game of ball to keep warm. Just before dinner it became warm.

Dinner was Spanish Rice, Buttered Peas and Canned Fruit. The

THIRTY OR MORE PRIZES EACH WEEK

(Over Krogers)

"ARE YOU MY DADDY?"

"YES, sonny boy, I'm your daddy—the daddy you don't remember because you were just a few months old when I left for war."

War is heartless, little man. It doesn't give much heed to family ties. But, along with millions of other men and women in uniform, your dad is doing everything he can to keep another war from starting when you're grown up and have children of your own.

It's more than good Americanism to invest in War Bonds... it's good business. Let's buy more Bonds than we planned, now during the 5th War Loan Drive... and let's keep on doing so!

5TH WAR LOAN BUY MORE THAN BEFORE

This advertisement prepared and contributed by
THE STUDEBAKER CORPORATION

HURRY UP, AMERICA! GIVE HIM YOUR ANSWER!

the Fifth War Loan Drive ends July 8th!

AMERICANS!

You in the factories. You in the offices. You on the farms. You in the homes.

You cannot—you must not—fail to get behind your fighting man in this supreme, heroic hour.

He knows what's ahead.

Bloody, bitter fighting... superhuman toil ... hardship... pain... perhaps death.

He's facing it. He'll keep on facing it, as long as there's breath in his body and blood in his veins.

But he wants to know what's behind him.

And you have only a few days left to give him the answer.

5TH WAR LOAN

That answer will be written in the final figures on the Fifth War Loan Drive.

For this is the crucial, the all-important Drive. Never has the need for War Bond buying been so great.

To make the Drive a success, you—and everyone else—must buy at least twice as many Bonds as you bought in the last drive.

If you haven't yet bought your full share, DO IT NOW! The time is short! Make YOUR supreme effort in HIS supreme hour!

Remember—a soldier, your soldier, is waiting for his answer.

What will it be... from you?

And here are
5 MORE reasons for buying
EXTRA Bonds in the 5th!

1. War Bonds are the best, the safest investment in the world!
2. War Bonds return you $4 for every $3 in 10 years.
3. War Bonds help keep prices down.
4. War Bonds will help win the Peace by increasing purchasing power after the War.
5. War Bonds mean education for your children, security for you, funds for retirement.

SAFE CANNING

Four-fifths of last year's canning accidents, reports the National Safety Council, were the result of canning in the oven. Oven doors blew out, cans exploded, always causing trouble and sometimes serious accident. It looks neat to stow cans in the oven, out of the way of meal-getting and other activities, but it is not a good way, especially for new canners.

The only safe way is to follow directions of people who know how. The U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., will send bulletins on home canning. If these instructions are followed, canning will be safe. If the housewife learned from mother or grandmother, and remembers every step of the process and does not skip any, she will be safe.

Experienced canners of an older day learned by trial and error. Their usual method was by open kettle, hot pack, watching every detail. Modern pressure cookers are easier and safer, but also call for attention. Grandmother knew if she were careless she would lose her food, the time and trouble of preparing it, and might have sickness or death in the family besides. She took pains.

Let the new canners can, by all means. But let them, too, be careful.

TIPS ON CANNING

By Roberta Hersha, Professor in Nutrition Michigan State College

Does your victory garden boast a strawberry patch? Strawberries contain more vitamin C than any other Michignn grown dessert fruit. Strawberry shortcake made with enriched flour and loaded with strawberries is really quite a vitamin cocktail.

Strawberries do not make such a perfect canned product as some other berries but they taste unusually good in the middle of February just the same. Strawberries keep their shape and hold their juices better if they are washed before they are hulled. They are plumper and have a better color, if the berries are brought slowly to the boiling point with the sugar the night before canning and then let stand in the kettle in a cool place until morning. The next day bring them to the boiling point, pack hot and process them in the boiling water bath for 5 minutes. The processing in the water bath makes certain that there will be no mold growth on the surface.

One cup of sugar to a quart of berries makes a very excellent product, but less or none can be used. Sugar does not help preserve canned fruit — it's heat that makes fruit keep. So don't blame sugar rationing for spoilage.

If a half a cup or less of sugar to the finished quart is being used, berries may be heated with the sugar to draw out some juice, boiled gently for three or four minutes, packed hot and processed for 5 minutes in the boiling water bath. The last step is important since much fruit was lost last year that had been canned by the open kettle method.

Follow the directions of the manufacturer in sealing jars. There are several types on the market and they seal in different ways. In general, one-half inch head space should be left in pint jars and one inch head space in quarts. Exceptions to this rule are jars packed with corn or peas in which a full inch or more head space should be left. If the jar is to be sealed with a three-piece top where the glass lid curves downward, an inch head is recommended also even for pints.

Before processing, all jars are partially sealed but a partial seal is obtained in several ways. With the newer three-piece lid, the small-sized rubber should be taken out of hot water, fitted on the ledge of the glass top, and then both of them should be placed carefully on the edge of a jar with a perfectly smooth level edge. The metal ring should then be turned down gradually until it is tight and then back one-fourth turn. After processing this type of lid should be tightened gradually to avoid displacing the rubber. After 18 to 24 hours the ring may be removed. It is usually better to remove metal rings because they have a tendency to rust on the jars.

One-piece screw tops with rubbers that fit on the jar shoulder should be tightened and turned back, one-fourth inch before processing and then the seal completed after processing. Remember the metal rings which are a part of three-piece lids are turned back one-quarter turn and the one-piece screw tops are turned back one-quarter inch.

Vacuum seal lids are actually partially sealed when the rings are turned down tightly as long as the run-on composition is still hot and soft. The seal is made as the jars cool. The rings should be turned down firmly without exerting undue pressure before processing and they should not be tightened further afterward. The next day the rings may be removed.

Hot pack is recommended now-a days for most all products even fruits. There are several advantages over the old cold pack method. More food can be packed in the jars since air is driven out by the pre-cooking and the actual processing begins much sooner. Most folks, however, prefer raspberries packed cold since they tend to keep their shape better. They need merely to be packed in the jar, covered with boiling medium or light sirup, and processed for 20 minutes in a boiling water bath with the water a good two inches over the tops of the jars. Sirup made from one cup of sugar and 3 cups of water is sweet enough for many persons but 1 cup of sugar to 2 cups of water will not use special canning sugar rations too rapidly.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture has recently been issuing warnings about oven canning. This method of canning is quite uncertain even when the oven has a heat regulator because the rate of heat transfer is slower in dry heat than in the boiling water bath. Experiments have shown also that jars in different positions in the oven heat at varying rates of speed. Above all, the liquid in the jars boils so rapidly that if jars are filled too full, if tops are closed too tightly, or if the escape of steam is prevented by the boiling up of the juice, too much pressure is built up in the jars and breakage results. Severe accidents have been reported from all parts of the country. In view of these facts it is much wiser to use the boiling water bath for fruits and tomatoes and the pressure cooker method for vegetables.

Vegetables are more difficult to can than are the acid products like fruits and tomatoes. A higher temperature than boiling is necessary if all dangerous germs are surely to be destroyed. The temperature inside a properly operated pressure cooker when the gauge registers 10 lbs. is 240 degrees, considerably above the 212 degree boiling temperature. Unfortunately it takes at least six hours of boiling water bath processing to destroy the germ that causes botulinus poisoning.

It is far wiser to beg or borrow a pressure cooker in which to process your victory garden vegetables. This year aluminum pressure cookers equipped with dial gauges are on the market and no priority is needed to purchase them.

All vegetables should be precooked and packed hot. Probably peas or snap beans soon will be ready for home canning. Both of these vegetables should be simmered for five minutes in water to cover before being packed in jars, and covered with the cooking liquid to which 1 teaspoon of salt per quart has been added. Remember that peas need more head space than snap beans do. After the jars are partially sealed, process pint jars of green beans for 30 minutes in the pressure cooker at 10 pounds pressure; pint jars of peas for 45 minutes at 10 pounds and quart jars of snap beans for 35 minutes. It is better not to try to can peas in quart jars since they become overcooked and mushy.

Be sure to open the petcock of the cooker as soon as the gauge registers zero, but not before. Your gauge will be less likely to get out of order if this rule is followed.

Above all don't try to substitute canning powders or tablets for proper processing. Most of them are ineffective and some are actually harmful to health.

For detailed canning directions on a card which can be hung in a kitchen, send to Michigan State College Bulletin Office for a "Wartime Canning" chart and the extra leaflet on "Using Wartime Canning Equipment."

PICKLE NEWS

By H., E. Brumm, Dist. Mgr.
H. J. Heinz Company
Charlevoix, Mich.

During the last week of June right up to July 1st farmers who are growing pickling cucumbers should inspect their pickle fields and replant any hills or rows that are missing so as to have a full stand. It is surprising how fast these late replantings will grow as the soil is now warm and plant growth is active and rapid. The replanted hills may be only a week later in starting to produce pickles than the vines from the first planted seed.

If you need extra seed for replanting purposes call, or see your field man or local representative. He has a supply prepared purposely for replanting which is supplied to you as needed free of cost. At this date it is still time to replant the entire acreage if the stand is poor for any reason. In that case it is advisable to drag the field thoroughly, killing any weeds that have started and then to replant entirely. Seed is available for this purpose and you may get it by contacting the field man. We have records of replanting in this manner as late as July 8th, although usually July 1st is considered the latest date that replanting is advisable.

THIS EXPLAINS WHY
TELEPHONES ARE SCARCE

Here is a telephone-"central office" in the South Pacific. The Marine Corps operator is putting through calls between headquarters and advanced posts.

Every move our armed forces make is co-ordinated by countless telephone instruments, miles and miles of wire. As the pace of war increases, the need for this equipment grows greater and greater.

Unfortunately, it is impossible to equip our fighting men, and still meet all requests for service at home.

Orders for telephones essential to the war effort are filled promptly. Other requests for new service are handled under an authorized and equitable procedure, not subject to exceptions, as present users give up service. But there is a long and growing waiting list.

We regret if you have been seriously inconvenienced. But we appreciate your patience and understanding.

be at Boyne City Extension Office Thursday, June 22nd, 2 to 5 p. m. and at East Jordan City Building Friday, June 23rd, 2 to 5 p. m.

In many cases pressure cooker gauges have never been checked, and therefore higher losses than usual may take place in home canning. An opportunity is presented to the entire public to have these gauges tested this week.

As an added service, you can secure the latest information on all phases of home canning. A very convenient canning chart will be available to all interested. Miss Fero will also have a display showing the different types of jars and lids. Miss Fero will be glad to assist with any canning problem. Later this summer, canning demonstrations will be held at convenient locations.

an electric meat saw which is the finest obtainable. Meat cut with this saw is free from irritating bone chips, and in other cuts, especially pork loin, the old unfair hand methods are superseded by one in which all customers get an equal amount of meat and bone.

Harold and Earl are well and favorably known to the grocery and meat patrons in Charlevoix and its environs, both having been associated with Martin Block's for ten years. Harold has lived here all his life, and Earl lived here for a number of years prior to his being employed by the late Martin Block. Under the old name of Martin Block's Grocery, they will continue to carry on a friendly serve-self, cash-and-carry business in the same high standard with which patrons of the store are so well acquainted, and which has served to make old patrons out of new ones.

EDW. E. SHANAHAN IS NOW A COMMANDER

Promotion to the rank of commander in the United States Navy has been won by Lieutenant Commander Edward K. Shanahan, 39, navy aviator on active duty in the Pacific.

A graduate of the Charlevoix High School and the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., class of '27, Commander Shanahan served aboard the U.S.S. Idaho until he entered naval aviation in 1930, and was attached to a scouting squadron aboard the new historic aircraft carrier, U.S.S. Lexington.

After two years of shore duty as inspector-instructor in the Naval Reserve Aviation Division, Norfolk, Va., naval base, he went to the Pacific coast in 1934. He served with an observation squadron of the U.S.S. New York and on the carriers, Langley and Saratoga, and in 1937 was assigned to the destroyer, U.S.S. Worden, as gunnery officer and later as executive officer. In June 1941 he went to the University of Minnesota as instructor in the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps. Returning to sea duty a few months after the United States entered the war, he joined an Atlantic Fleet air wing, and since, August, 1943, has been attached to one of the largest and newest carriers.

His wife, the former Philn Armstrong, and two sons, Robert and Bruce, make their home here. His mother, Mrs. Lisle Shanahan, resides in Detroit.

Warm Afternoon we played ball. Supper at 6 o'clock was Scrambled Eggs, String Beans, Cocoa, and Toast. At 8 o'clock we had campfire about one-eighth of a mile from camp. Here the new members were given the Tenderfoot Badge to wear till they earned more rights as Scouts. These boys were Tom Herrington and Bill Berber. Bob Carey blew Taps with Eugene Barber as Echo. Hit the hay at 0:40.

Monday, June 5th, dawned warm but cloudy on a very hungry camp. All but the Scout Master were up at 6:30 but the Patrol Cooks would not let the Boys eat until we had awakened Pat. By the time he was fully awake we were starved and could eat anything, but the Pancakes and Sausages with real Maple Syrup donated by Mrs. Ralph Hamilton, were super and we ate our fill. 3rd Patrol won Inspection with no points against them, 2nd, 2 points, and 1st, 3 points. Played ball in forenoon. Boys left for town at 10:45, leaving David Hamilton in charge of Fires and Camp Grounds.

Boys came back at 2:30 with the news of the Fall of Rome. Played ball all afternoon while Tenderfoot members passed Scouts Pace for Second Class. Boy! Was the Stew we had for the evening meal good! And were we hungry! We ate till we couldn't eat any more and still there was a little bit more left. Canned fruit and cookies certainly made the meal fit for a king. Warren Shadko played Taps with Robert Shanahan as Echo.

Tuesday, June 6th, Bob Shanahan played Reveille. Brenkfast fit the cold rainy morning it was! Oatmeal and Prunes or Cornflakes and Prunes with Fruit Juice and Cocoa and Toast was really tied into by all. Inspection was after we had broken camp at 9:15. 3rd Patrol won inspection with no Points against them again. Tie for 2nd place between 2nd and 1st Patrol with one point. Forenoon we played ball, after the game Mr. McDonough told us of the Invasion. Mr. Hawley told us the winners of the prizes.

3rd Patrol, Inspection; 2nd Patrol, Cooking, and 1st Patrol, Cooperation. So each Patrol gets a Pup Tent to use on Patrol Hikes. For Dinner we used the 1st Patrol Stove to cook our Hamburgers. By 1:30 were we glad to start home! Homesick wasn't the word for it. Charlevoix Harbor was the most Beautiful sight we ever hope to see though we knew that before we left for the Island.

Capt. Leslie T. Shapton Navigates Plane to India In 142 Hours Flying Time

When night come we put on our mosquito boots and similar gear and were required to rub an insect repellent on our faces, hands and other exposed portions of our bodies."

After a night in the quarters at the Dakar airfield, they took off at 6 a. m. for Marrakech, the ancient native capital of Southern Morocco, with its time-worn stucco castles. The flight was begun in the early hours of the morning to aid the heavily-loaded plane in its take-off.

Modern Air Fields Carved From Jungle

"Between Dakar and Marrakech, high in the Atlas Mountains, we flew over some of the most barren and desolate areas in the world," said Captain Shapton. "There were steep, slippery mountainsides and high plateaus of solid rock. There was not a living thing or even a bit of vegetation anywhere in sight; it all seemed so prehistoric that I wouldn't have been a bit surprised if I had seen a dinosaur emerge from behind a rock at any moment."

At 17,500 feet, the big plane roared through a pass between the snow-capped peaks of the Atlas Mountains, and beyond the scene changed almost miraculously. Now there was green vegetation below, farms and herds of goats and cattle, the thatched huts of natives in the semi-circular villages.

Landing at Marrakech's modern airfield, the party spent that night in an excellent French hotel that nestled in a grove of palm trees within the town. The cuisine was above reproach and the waiters were Italian prisoners of war, who seemed happy and contented.

Next stop on the journey was Algiers. For hours they flew over the fringes of the desert, as small native villages with mud huts and occasionally a little town with stucco houses floated past far below. Around the villages was the brilliant green of tropical vegetation, apparently in areas that had been irrigated.

At Algiers, the airmen landed at a modern field and there they first saw the effects of war. The big hangars had been strafed by low-flying German and Italian planes in times past, windows were broken, doors shot through. On the field were British warplanes of every type.

"Algiers was a 'crossroads of the world' all right," said Captain Shapton. "In a palm-shaded terrace I saw a man whom I took to be Jack Sharkey, the prizefighter. I approached another man to find out. The latter proved to be 'Lefty' Gomez, the baseball player, but Sharkey was there all right — he had been refereeing military boxing bouts —.

Across the Sahara

That night, while mechanics were working on one of the engines, members of the party inquired where some good American dance music might be found and were directed to a swanky Algiers night club. The place was ritzy enough, but the orchestra, apparently French, was atrocious. One hour of that music was enough.

Leaving Algiers early in the morning, the big plane from Memphis headed east over the trackless Sahara — that great, mysterious desert where there is neither time nor space, but only grains of sand and eternity. They flew over Tunis, the chief city of Tunisia with its strange mixture of Arabic, Turkish, and European peoples, customs and buildings, and continued on to Tripoli.

"At Tripoli," Captain Shapton said, "we really saw the effects of the war. In the harbor which we circled as we approached the town were wrecks of a dozen or more burned or scuttled ships. There were the marks of machine gun bullets on the buildings that faced the waterfront."

In Tripoli, the air travelers visited the former headquarters of Germany's General Rommel, a green stucco-type building with several domes and towers that was formerly a hotel and is now an officers' club. It was a magnificent structure, almost directly on the waterfront.

View Battle Ruins

Leaving Tripoli, the Memphis airmen flew on to Bengasi, and en route they circled over the Bay of Gabes where they saw a German Messerschmitt plane, right side up, setting beneath the clear blue waters about 50 feet off shore. Apparently it had been shot down there.

When they landed at Bengasi's air field they saw the high-piled junk heaps that were wrecks of German and Italian planes that had been strafed or bombed before they were able to get off the ground. The hangars and other buildings bore the scars of numerous bullets ad shells, and all along the road leading to the city were stacks of old ammunition taken from the scrapped enemy planes.

From Bengasi the party continued on across the desert and flew over Tobruk, where the embattled British made their heroic stand for many desperate months, and Al Alamein, where General Montgomery turned the tide of history as he started his big desert push that finally drove the Germans and Italians out of Africa.

"The desert was thick with the mementos of war," said Captain Shapton. "As far as the eye could see there were the trucks of thousands of tanks, criss-crossing over the sands. On every side were the wrecks of tanks, planes, trucks, gun carriers and military equipment of many kinds, together with miles of slit trenches, some of which were circular and some built in zig-zag fashion.

Tanks Shot It Out

"At one place, far out in the desert, we saw a row of 12 or 14 tanks lined up in perfect formation, and facing them less than 1000 feet away was another line of tanks of about equal strength. Both groups of tanks had been all shot to hell, turrets blown off and tracks blasted away. It looked as if the two opposing groups of tanks had met in the desert and shot it out, toe to toe."

Practically none of the wrecked equipment has been touched by the desert natives, who have learned to fear the white man's "booby traps" and buried mines. The British have used some of these battered heaps for target practice, but most of the equipment stands now just as it was abandoned in battle.

Next came Cairo at the mouth of Egypt's ancient Nile, and the first thing the approaching Memphis airmen saw were the pyramids and the Sphinx, the oldest relics known to man which have silently surveyed the world since 5000 years before Christ. They were visible from many miles away, and near them the bronze sands of the desert gave way to the lush, fertile valley of the Nile.

Pay Visit to Cairo

Landing for engine inspection and maintenance at Cairo's new and modern American air field, a few miles from the city, the travelers found an excellent terminal with long, paved runways; modern hangars, repair shops and other brick buildings and an officers' quarters equipped with comfortable innerspring mattresses. Again the Army's Air Transport Command which has served modern air fields out of jungle and desert alike all over the world — was clearly on the job.

The visit to the Sphinx and the pyramids on the outskirts of Cairo was an interesting experience, during which the Memphis party was conducted by a grizzled and turbaned native guide named Abdul, who spoke with a broad Oxford accent that he had acquired from the English.

Abdul explained that 10,000 slaves worked day and night for 10 years to build the pyramids for an ancient Pharaoh. He said they quarried the huge blocks of solid stone from a nearby mountain, ferried them across the Nile and dragged them on rollers up to the tops of the pyramids on long dirt inclines that disappeared many centuries ago.

The head of the Sphinx is hollow and, Abdul said, it was the custom of the high priest to conceal himself therein and speak to the multitudes, leading the latter to believe that it was the Sphinx talking as an oracle. The chin of the Sphinx is now braced with sandbags, as a protection against possible bombing.

From Cairo, the flyers continued on across a wild and desolate country to another stop, which proved to be one of the hottest places in the world.

India Is Destination

It was so hot that no one worked between 10 a. m. and 5:30 p. m., so they devoted their efforts to trying to keep cool. The only shade is that of the buildings for there are no trees. Most of the work is done at night. Yet, the morale of our soldiers there was fine — those boys certainly deserve a lot of credit.

From this stop the sky trail led on to Karachi, India, and the end of the party's long journey from Memphis. Karachi, too, has a modern American airfield which is maintained under the jurisdiction of the Army's Indo-China wing. From this point, planes continue on across India to China and beyond.

At Karachi the Memphis fliers turned toward home, a trip accomplished without event.

The Fourth Ferrying Group, of Memphis, operates a 14,000-mile cargo run from Miami to India, called the "Firehall Express," the longest regular scheduled air transport service in the world. This service was inaugurated last November to fill the need for direct air transportation between the United States and the China-India theater of war. Its men and crews are constantly coming and going and Memphis crews may be found at all points along this route that runs more than half way around the world.

VERNON BROWN OPENS CAMPAIGN FOR LT. GOVERNOR

"Job Needs Teamwork"; Cites 39-Year Record of Administrative Work.

In opening his campaign for Lieutenant Governor, Vernon J. Brown, Auditor-General, pledged complete cooperation between the office of Lieutenant Governor and all other administrative offices.

Brown cited his 39-year record in public service as qualifying him for the job. He originally started his political career as a clerk in the Auditor-General's office. Since then he has been successfully elected township supervisor, Alderman, City of Lansing, secretary of Ingham County Road Commission, Ingham County Clerk, Mayor of Mason, Michigan, President of the Mason School Board, five times elected a member of the State House of Representatives, and in 1938 elected to the office of Auditor-General, which he still holds.

During Brown's five terms as a representative, he was a member of the Commission of Inquiry into governmental expenses in 1932 and was a member of the House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee from 1933 to 1937. He also was chairman of the General Taxation Committee and Committee on Taxation of Legislative Council from 1931 to 1936.

During his tenure in the legislature, Brown sponsored hundreds of bills aimed at economy in state and local government, which were adopted, and was an active leader in taxation reforms.

As Auditor-General, Brown has continued his policy of eliminating waste and inefficiency and has cut the expense of operating his own office considerably. He is constantly watching for unnecessary expenditures and other discrepancies and has earned the title of "Guardian of the Public Purse."

"I believe my record as a successful legislator and administrative official qualifies me for the important job of Lieutenant Governor," said Brown.

Vernon Brown is 69 years old and in private life is the publisher of a weekly newspaper at Mason, Michigan, his home town. He has become known throughout the state for his editorials in Michigan weekly papers on efficiency in government and also on taxation problems.

PIPE PUSHER AVOIDS TRENCHING

Sometimes it is difficult to get water pipes from basements to well pits when pipes must be placed under unexcavated porches, tree roots, or roadways. An auto jack, a block to grip the pipe, a plug with 3/16 inch hole drilled attached with coupling and a water source under pressure will enable the operator to save time, trouble, and much hard work. If the distance is more than 25 feet, it is desirable to dig an inspection hole at about the half way mark. This one-inch pipe was pushed a distance of 58 feet from a basement to a pit for connection to another pipe. — W. H. SHELDON, Assistant Professor in Agricultural Engineering, Michigan State College.

The Value of a Congressman

Ability Supplemented By Seniority Rights

The value of a congressman to his district is not vested merely in his ability, although that is of course a paramount factor in successful representation. A great deal of value in Washington is due to Seniority rights which he has attained. Each additional term which he serves, not only better fits him through experience, but his seniority gives him more advantageous committee assignments.

It is very likely his next term will find Congressman Bradley the ranking member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries committee, a post particularly valuable to the eleventh district, and also the Chairman of the committee on Mines and Mining, another committee post important to this district because of its interests along those lines.

ARMY AIR FORCES AT WORK OVER BURMA

Hot and Hotter
Land of Two Kinds of Weather

Jack Barrett went to ——
He didn't understand
The reason for his transfer
From the pleasant mountain land.
The season was September,
And it killed him out of hand.
—Kipling.

And that is a picture of a desolate, stifling spot on the arid plains of India, by a man who knew India, and where today, there lands, huddled about a long concrete runway, a group of mud-walled, straw-thatched native huts. On the door of each is a drawing of a Disney-like beaver riding a bomb to earth. The beaver carries a machine gun and wears a look of grim determination. He's a symbol of one of the most famous air force units in India, "The Eager Beaver Bombing Company, Dealers in Sudden Death From the Skies," of which Technical Sergeant Clarence H. Smith, of Charlevoix, is a member.

On January 20, 1943 the Liberator squadron was organized in India with only two veteran plane crews which had seen combat. The others were untried replacements from the U. S. Just five days later new and old crews plowed thru anti-aircraft fire and Zeros to smash at Rangoon. Since then the Beavers have poured 1,636 tons of bombs on the Japs on 168 missions. Their four-engined ships have ranged far and wide over southeast Asia, striking at Mandalay and Rangoon repeatedly, searching the coast of Burma for

FROM AN AIR BASE IN INDIA The Tenth Air Force Headquarters in India announce the awards of the Distinguished Flying Cross and an Oak Leaf Cluster to the Air Medal to Technical Sergeant Clarence H. Smith, 24, son of Mrs. David Smith of Route 3, Charlevoix, Michigan.

The citation to the Distinguished Flying Cross reads in part: "For extraordinary achievement by participating in combat missions totaling more than three hundred hours during which ex-posure to enemy was probable and expected. These flights in which he has flown from bases in India have been eminently successful. By diligent attention to duty and superior execution of his assignment as a member of a combat team in heavy bombardment aircraft he has contributed much to the success of many missions. The operations in which he has flown constitute acts of extraordinary achievement in aerial flight and reflect the highest credit on the military forces of the United States."

Technical Sergeant Smith has been in the Army Air Forces for two years and has been on duty in India for the past year, as Engineer Gunner with the famous Seventh Bombardment Group, a Tenth Air Force Unit operating in the Strategic Air Force, Eastern Air Command.

Sweet cherries are now being harvested. Present prospects still point to the highest yield on record in this county.

In addition to the usual help, we will need new recruits from within the county and from outside. A special plea is being sent to all organizations within the county urging the members to volunteer their services. REVISED DRAFT PROCEDURE DUE ON JULY FIRST

MEN PASSING PRE-INDUCTION EXAMS TO BE DESIGNATED FOR GENERAL MILITARY SERVICE AFTER SATURDAY

All draft boards have received notice of the new revised draft procedure which becomes effective July 1st. After that date all men taking the pre-induction physical examination and passing will be designated as acceptable for general military service rather than for a special branch, as Navy or Army, as has been done in the past. After July 1st and each month thereafter, local draft boards will receive only one call for inductees and these men will be sent to a receiving station where they will then be put into the Army or Navy. At present a separate call has been made by the Army when they wish men and by the Navy when they needed new recruits.

Selective service announced that the new arrangement has been made because it was impossible to withdraw men from the present separate pools at an even rate, with the result that in some cases fathers were being taken into the Navy while non-fathers in the same board still were awaiting calls to the Army.

The revised procedure will enable the draft boards to fill their quotas by selecting available volunteers and non-fathers ahead of fathers and induct men in accordance with their order number.

No male persons between the ages of 18 and 37 may enlist, they may, however, volunteer for immediate induction through the draft board.

On and after July 1st, registrants who upon a pre-induction physical examination were found acceptable for military service, may be sent for induction, even though the pre-induction examination is more than 90 days old.

Selective service has also advised the local boards not to send for induction men classified as fit for limited service only unless ordered to do so by the State Selective Service Director.

WAR FOOD ASSISTANT IN CANNING SHOWS

Six Demonstrations To Be Held On July 5th, 6th, And 7th.

Homemakers of Charlevoix County will be interested in the announcement that Miss Fero, Emergency War Food Assistant, will conduct six canning demonstrations on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, July 5th, 6th, and 7th. The following is her schedule:

Wednesday, July 5th: Star Community Hall at 10 a. m. and Boyne City Gymnasium at 2 p. m.

Thursday, July 6th: Marion Center Grange Hall at 10 a. m. and Charlevoix City Hall at 2 p. m.

Friday, July 7th: Rock Elm Grange Hall at 10 a. m. and East Jordan City Building at 2 p. m.

All of these meetings are open to the public and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

The process of canning fruits and vegetables will be shown in detail. The "how" and "when" of drying, brining, pickling, and storing are to be discussed. Types of jars, covers, and other equipment are to be displayed. A new addition, "Wartime Canning," giving complete directions for use of both the hot water bath and the pressure cooker will be available. The best insurance against spoilage is to follow directions carefully.

PRIMARY SCHOOL MEETING WILL BE HELD MON. EVE

CANDIDATES TO THE SCHOOL BOARD WILL BE SELECTED AND OTHER MATTERS OF IMPORTANCE DISCUSSED.

At a public meeting held Tuesday, June 6th, it was decided to hold an open caucus Monday, July 3rd, at 8 p. m. at Charlevoix High School for the purpose of selecting candidates for election at the annual school board meeting July 10, 1944.

Inasmuch as other matters of prime importance are to be placed before the public at this time, it was decided the time given to the selection of candidates must be considerably shortened.

For some time now the public has shown a lack of interest in the Public School system. Attendance figures at annual school board elections verify this.

It is hoped that qualified voters will attend this primary, Monday evening, July 3rd, in Charlevoix High School. The importance of our public schools cannot be minimized, for upon the education of our children depends the future of Charlevoix and America.

CHINA MISSIONARY TO SPEAK AT BARNARD

Will Tell Of Nearly a Quarter Of Century Of Life In Changchow.

Rev. H. Veenschoten and family have spent nearly a quarter of a century in China in the city of Changchow. Life in Changchow has been more than interesting for the Veenschotens in recent years. Their first air raid, when the National Government was putting down a rebellion in the province, came in 1933. During the present Sino-Japanese War they went through over 200 Japanese air raids. Plaster was knocked from the rooms in their home, windows were broken and shrapnel from near hits broke tiles on the roof. As head of the Relief Committee in Changchow, Mr. Veenschoten frequently had to pass through the lines, on several occasions being machine-gunned.

The public is cordially invited to hear Rev. Veenschoten on Sunday, July 2nd, at the Bacnard Reformed Church.

Kashmir, An Approach to Heaven
Land of Beauty, Romance and Song

The following interesting letter was received by Mr. and Mrs. Roland McCann, St. James, Beaver Island, from an English lad in the Royal Air Force, and a friend of Roland McCann Jr., a member of the American Air Forces, in India:

Royal Air Force, India.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. McCann:

You will not doubt, wonder who on earth this letter can be from. Well, a few days ago I met Roland. I have, as a matter of fact, been in his company often since then, and you will see by my address — the country, but of course I cannot name the place of our meeting or I would have the censor chasing me.

Roland is looking very well, indeed, and keeping immensely fit, and is very fascinated with what he has seen of India.

You will, no doubt, have heard many stories of the East, and tho many tropical diseases it carries with it. I, my self, have spent a couple of years here and travelled extensively, and have been to the four corners of the country — on its scorching plains, and in jungle country that is just dense.

Well, I ask you not to worry — we don't. True, tropical diseases may be many but they are brought down to a minimum by some of the cleverest men the medical world can offer, both from your country and mine.

The health of the forces is very well looked after and our food is excellent and of the very best.

I came out here after the Battle of Britain, where, believe me, it was far safer in the sky than on the ground. I will try to define you an outline of the country we are in as best I can: The moment one lands in India, one will find almost everything — customs, character, dress, language, and colour different. There is even greater variety of climate and country. There are torrid waterless deserts, such as that of the Sind, flat moist tracts in Bengal, rolling wheatfields in the Punjab and United Provinces. The lower slopes of the Mountain Ranges are temperate and densely wooded. The peaks are in the eternal snows.

The constitution of India is intricate. The rulers of the States make their own laws, and have their own officers, judges and troops. The rulers are loyal to the Empire.

However, as to a personal contact with the people of India, a great deal can be done by a considerate approach. They are practically in every respect a different people. Their social system is unlike ours. In the fighting forces you will find a strict observance of religion. With the Brahmans, the highest caste of the Hindu, the observance is so strict that should the shadow, even, of man not of his caste fall across his food, that food must be thrown away. Indians are reserved; almost shy. At

TOWN and FARM in WARTIME

Prepared by OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION

Army Trucks for Farm Use

The farmer in critical need of a truck may apply to his county AAA Committee for a used army truck, the War Food Administration announces. Upon the basis of applications on hand and further investigation AAA offices prepare letters certifying to the needs for available trucks. These letters authorize truck dealers to negotiate with proper authorities and buy the trucks for resale to approved applicants. WFA warns that for some time relatively few persons who need trucks for essential agricultural purposes will get them.

Galvanized Ware for Civilians

REMEMBER WHEN

Fifty-eight Years Ago

(Thursday, June 24, 1886)

(From the Files of The Charlevoix Journal)

Ludwig II, who was recently deposed from the Bavarian throne has committed suicide. He had gone out for a promenade in the park of the Berg Castle, accompanied by Dr. Gudden, his physician, says a cable dispatch from Munich. The king suddenly threw himself into the Starnberg Lake and was drowned. The physician jumped into the water to rescue the king and was also drowned.

A shower of fish, several inches in length, fell at Wyoming, O., where children gathered them by the pocketful.

The City of Vancouver, British Columbia, was nearly destroyed by fire. Aid is solicited, as nearly three thousand persons are homeless.

Extra copies of the Journal at Weed's Drug Store, five cents each.

The Sweetland bath house was called the Metaphysical Bethesda in the advertisements. It's a wonder that anyone dared to go into the place, with that name.

Nothing new under the sun. In an announcement of the 4th of July celebration program (which, by the way, was held this year on the 3rd) one of the features was advertised as the "Fire-Fly Fleet On Round Lake in the Evening." Now it's the Venetian Night.

(Wow!) Our esteemed contemporary having advertised with a good deal of apparent satisfaction 6,000 impressions of job work in one week, we would state for those interested that the Journal job press printed 4,625 impressions of work last Friday afternoon and Saturday in lots of 500 and less, and it don't ran by steam, either. (Foot-power in those days.)

It is reported that the Boyne River was never so generous in giving up her speckled beauties as this year. It is a very common occurrence for local sports to bring in from 65 to 72 of the finny tribe in the few hours of an afternoon's sojourn along her banks, some of which have weighed 1¼ pounds.

Mrs. Sullivan of Beaver Island, had quite an experience for her a few days ago. She is 62 years of ago and has just taken her first ride on the cars. She came to the island by boat 33 years ago and has never left her home hat once since. Her enjoyment of her car journey was somewhat marred by the constant fear she experienced that the cars would blow up and kill her.

Mrs. Phebe Dixon, wife of John S. Dixon, died Tuesday afternoon after a short illness, aged 66 years.

Will A. Aldrich, formerly a compositor in the Sentinel Office, but now of the Inter-Ocean, Chicago, is visiting relatives and friends in Charlevoix this week.

(From the East Jordan Enterprise): Jeff Weikel set 'em up to the boys, last Thursday. It was an 8-pound girl, and Jeff is supremely happy.

Pupils neither absent nor tardy during spring term — High School: Luna Washburn, John Nicholls, Maggie Enos, Julia Miller, Grace Perry, Ralph Washburn, Charles Hemmings, and Herbert See.

Persons desiring situations can have an announcement inserted free in our want columns on the first page (Help must have been scarce in those days).

"Hi, Mom, it's me!"
The next best thing to having a soldier open the door at home with "Hi, Mom, it's me!" is to hear him say it over the telephone.
THIS EVENING thousands of boys and girls in uniform will be asking for the Long Distance lines that connect them with their homes all over America.
Please try to save the wires from seven to ten for the service men.

YOUR INVASION!

FROM General Bradley, leading the Invasion ground forces, right through every rank, American men now face a brutal, desperate, able enemy. For this invasion has only begun—before our fighters lies a hard and bloody task, one that demands all their courage, backed by all your faith in their ultimate victory.

That faith will be tested many times in this invasion—in grim struggles, setbacks, possibly even temporary defeats. It will be up to you to remember that early victories usually only mean more savage opposition from a foe made more bitter, more ruthless as the shadow of his doom grows larger—up to you to keep that faith in days and nights of gloom as well as in hours of triumph.

There is little that you can do to show that you realize what they must face, perhaps for many months. But one thing you can do—back the attack with every dollar you can spare! Let the Bonds you buy in this greatest of Drives be the measure of your belief in their ultimate victory!

When the delegates to the Republican Convention from every state in the Union assemble in Chicago the week of June 26th they will present to the voters of the nation a nominee for President who possesses these qualifications, who will be the man America needs in the crucial years from 1945 to 1949.

Government Traveling—

People on government business still are traveling 300 to 400 million miles a year, the Byrd Economy Committee has declared, and burning 20 to 30 million gallons of gas.

Progress toward cutting down such travel, it added, is "neither substantial nor impressive."

The committee, a joint Senate-House group with Treasury and Budget Bureau representation and headed by Senator Byrd (D. Va.) continued:

"It is apparent that the Federal government is in the position of urging the State governments and its citizens to cut down drastically on the use of automobiles, gasoline and tires while its own record is not as good as it might be."

Even in law enforcement and war agencies, the committee said in a report filed in the Senate, there should be increased effort to reduce the number of cars owned and miles traveled. And there is "nothing special" about the work of other agencies, it added, that would not permit "drastic reductions."

fice in Boyne City and City Treasurer's Office in East Jordan. It would be appreciated if all men, women and youths who find it possible to pick cherries this year either full or part time would register at one of these points.

The growers will be paying 50c per lug and this means that real money can be made this year. Skilled pickers will pick 15 lugs a day, while the average adult will pick from 8 to 10. A family made up of the mother and three or four children makes a most desirable unit and can earn $12 to $15 a day. Last year a family group made $250 for the season in one orchard. With the bigger crop and higher prices this year, this same group could earn much more.

Local ration boards at Charlevoix and Boyne City are authorized to issue gasoline to assist in harvesting of all crops. The Office of Price Administration is allowing gasoline to assist people from outside the county to come in for harvest purposes.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

Seeing is believing. We just witnessed with our own eyes a remarkable day's demonstration by the 70th division at Camp McCoy, Wisconsin, in which American doughboys from 48 states demonstrated the combat use of such modern weapons as the automatic rifle, machine gun mortars, pistols, grenade, antitank guns, flame thrower and rocket firing bazookas.

We saw our doughboys go through the rigorous bayonet drill, hand grenade at pill boxes, with the deadly machette knife in practice combat against Japs, and hasten their bodies and steel their nerves by crawling on their bellies through mud holes and barbed wire toward an enemy trench while live bullets cut thru the air three feet above their heads, and while dynamite blasts rocked the earth one to five feet away.

We saw doughboys protected by an artillery barrage advance upon fortified points with the aid of the finest military weapons the world has ever seen. All the product of the genius and labor of American industry.

We saw 10,000 doughboys parade in division review amid a blinding rainstorm that drenched everyone. General to Doughboy will merit well the highest honors that a grateful country can bestow. The Navy, the Air Corps, the Marine and other branches of their service have big jobs to do. Yet it is still the doughboy armed with a rifle, pistol and other equipment weighing seventy-six pounds in all who is the first to engage the enemy in hand-to-hand combat and who is the last to hold the land which he has thus seized. The exploits of their branches of the service have been well publicized. Now seems an appropriate time to give a hand to the man who takes the greatest risks and performs an indispensible service.

The 400 industrial leaders were given a real taste of army life. Arriving in special trains from Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan, they were garbed in military fatigue clothing, given field rations for a mid-day lunch, fed and lodged in army barracks.

Visitors had the opportunity to witness actual demonstrations of the use of modern weapons from anti-tank guns to the well-known bazooka which fires rocket shells. Artillery guns laid down a barrage of 105 and 15-millimeter shells while doughboys simulated an advance toward enemy positions.

The impact of the day's experience was tremendous. We had come from a civilian world into a military world while, with but a few hours time between them back at home, was the normal security of life. We grumbled over gasoline and food rationing, we fuss over lack of this and that. Following this impact of the military is hard, you feel ashamed that any Michigan worker would go out on a strike or that you had ever grumbled about any petty annoyance of civilian life.

Picture if you can the following experience that every man in an infantry company must undergo before he is permitted to enter actual combat. It is called infiltration training. The setting is a simulated no-man's land, criss-crossed with barbed wire and pocketed with shell holes, leading to an enemy trench.

The doughboys armed with rifles make their way toward the enemy trench, machine guns are firing live bullets in criss-cross fashion over their heads, in a control tower an operator sets off deafening blasts of dynamite that spout up high in the air like the burst of an artillery shell. The blasts spray mud over the men. The whirr of live bullets is in their ears.

Thus the army conditions each infantryman to actual battle scenes. It is a grim business and it makes you think and think.

The day's program was concluded with a division review. After a hot day clouds appeared in the west and soon a heavy thunderstorm broke loose. The 100,000 infantrymen took it as part of the war training. Without raincoats, General and Private alike participated in the event while civilians caught the spirit of the occasion and shouted round after round of cheers as the units marched by.

Seeing is believing. We only wish that every person on the Michigan front could have shared these experiences and could have seen for themselves what the American boys in camp or overseas today are doing for them. It would have made you proud to be an American.

Your congressman is no further from you than a Phone Call, a Wire, or a Letter. Fred Bradley has given "personal service" to hundreds in his district whenever he has been calld upon.

We know of no congressman who keeps as close touch with the "folks back home" as does Congressman Bradley. His weekly News Letter "This Week In Washington" is read by thousands of his constituents in the eleventh district and his weekly broadcasts over the Soo and Menominee stations give the people of this district a continual and close contact with their representative. This effort takes a good deal of time and considerable expense, but is in keeping with Congressman Bradley's policy of close contact with you.

From Rev. Collins—

Chaplain John W. Collins, former pastor of St. Mary's Church here, and now in New Guinea, writes: "Most people think of New Guinea in terms of slit trenches, fox holes, dense jungle, hard fighting. These things do exist. The infantry can tell you the horrors of that living hell. From what I have heard, eyewitnesses' evidence, it must be a terrible ordeal. How men can come out of that melee and still be men, still be human, is more than I can understand.

"But my interest in New Guinea is different. The people are interesting. Heard a group singing "How Dry I Am!" the other day. Too funny for anything. The soldiers have been teaching them, and they learn quickly. The country is beautiful. The weather is abominably hot. And they say it is twice as stuffy and sultry in the jungles. I'll take their word for it until I am called upon to go with my men.

"My interest in New Guinea is men. And I must say that the men whom I have met, with whom I have been privileged to work, are the cream of the crop. Our Nation cannot but continue to be the most outstanding in the world, with such noble men as its future citizens and leaders. They have their faults. True. They perhaps have more faults because of their living under wartime conditions. True. But who of us hasn't faults and many of them. We who are older and should know better. If I were at home in a comfortable dwelling, with a car and plenty of interesting work to do — knowing what I know now I would gladly leave all behind as long as I was going to be allowed to live with and work for the grandest bunch of young men in all the world.

"After a year of experience in the Army, I still maintain that as soon as the people of the U.S.A. turn back to God and say some prayers every day, and make their lives a prayer, the sooner the war will finish. We owe it to the flower of our young manhood to do everything in our power to save their lives and bring them home as soon as possible. Indifference will never accomplish this end. It calls for prayer and sacrifice. Smugness is entirely out of place these days. It can be tolerated in times of peace. 'All out for war' means one thing to me: 'All out for God.' Go back into history and see how many wars were unexpectedly terminated because people turned to God in prayer and right living. I gave up what I had for a greater joy: to be with these men. I have never regretted the change. I am prepared to die with them, and for them if need be. What are you doing for them?"

"Well, I think you're wise, John . . . no use keeping on trying things you know won't work. Just like prohibition. State-wide prohibition has been tried in this country seventy-two times in the last ninety years. It has been adopted forty-seven times in the past thirty-three years and discarded everywhere except in three states. Same thing was tried in eight provinces in Canada and in Norway, Sweden, Finland and Russia but it was an admitted failure and universally abandoned.

"The reason is prohibition does not prohibit. All you get is bootleg liquor instead of legal liquor, plus no end of crime and corruption."

enemy shipping, laying waste freight yards at Bankok, Thailand; ravaging Jap dock installations in the Andaman Islands and machine-gunning trains along the Moulmein-Bangkok railway.

Group Loses Two Planes

In the 168 missions the Beavers lost only two planes. One disappeared into the clouds over Rangoon with four Zeros trailing it. Rangoon claimed the second one, too. Six months ago Lt. Roy Vaughn, of Amarillo, Tex., was trying to nurse his plane home on three engines when a Zero made an overhead pass, misjudged, and cut his tail off.

It has not been easy for the Beaver who got back. On the table in one hut is a cigar box filled with jagged chunks of discolored metal. They were picked from the vitals of a bomber, Happy-Go-Lucky, which came home last fall with 80 holes in her, a dead co-pilot and a badly wounded pilot. The bombardier won the silver star on that trip. When an explosive shell fell in the cockpit, instantly killing the co-pilot and wounding the pilot, the bombardier flew the plane to friendly territory, revived the pilot enough for him to land the craft. The pilot also received the silver star.

The Happy-Go-Lucky crew comprises only a few of the many Beaver men who have taken a beating in the Jap skies and lived to tell about it. Yet to see these boys between missions is like seeing a group of carefree American lads at a summer camp.

Building "Elephant Time"

A huge elephant from a nearby Indian Temple is a familiar sight in the camp, its driver having learned very quickly that the Americans are willing to pay good rupees for a ride on his charge. The pilots boast that they are "building up lots of elephant time." A few have even been checked out on solo hops aboard the great beast. The only occupant of the camp who objects to his presence is Bombsight, a dog mascot who is not at all intimidated by the elephant's size.

Bombsight has been taken along on dozens of combat missions, riding on the flight deck in more than 100 combat hours. She can only be taken on low altitude missions, however, for the pressure hurts her ears.

When Bombsight is not flying, she is usually racing around camp perched on the hood of a jeep or off hunting jackals half again as large as herself.

But Sgt. Smith will tell you it is not the enemy or the tropical diseases, but it is the heat that "gets you." With the rains come the mosquitoes, in myriads. Soldiers are by discipline held to sleeping under their nets where they stifle and get up each morning from cots wringing wet. The civilian usually begins with the net over him. After some sleepless hours he decides he cannot stand it any longer and might as well die with an enlarged spleen as choke to death. So he changes one kind of misery for another and gets malaria into the bargain.

From early in June, usually, come the monsoon rains over Eastern and Northeastern India. They are a relief some people claim. Certainly they're a change. You change from being grilled alive to being steamed alive. Mark Twain, from experience, put it this way: "There are two kinds of weather in India. One is called summer, the other winter. In summer it gets hot enough to melt a brass doorknob. In winter the doorknob just turns mushy."

INDIA --- LAND OF BEAUTY

the same time they are persistent in the acquisition of knowledge. Knowing that, they have an ancient and precise civilization, yet aware of Western influence. You will find that a characteristic of of the higher rank of Indian in military service. Young men of good family have entered the RAF, both as pilots and to render service on the ground. The Indians are proud of their culture and ceremonial politeness is a cherished institution. They feel about their country as we feel about ours.

India has scores of ancient and modern cities and towns that interest the newcomer. It is strewn with ancient ruins of cities, forts, and temples, relics of her former greatness, at a time when other countries of today were in a state of savagery. The famous Taj Mahal at Agra must stand out foremost of her many great buildings — a wonder of the world, and and a dream of gold and marble. In her customs, dress, folk-lore, even her slow-moving bullock transport, one sees behind them all the civilization of 2,000 years ago.

Hindustani is a picturesque language. It is the language spoken up in the North where the loo — the hot wind, sweeps the plains in the summer, and where the milk comes literally frozen in the pail in the cold winter. It is a queer language too. It describes weather in terms of colour and music, and colour in terms of changes in the seasons.

India is a land of contrasts and short memories. It lives on the future. Already the countryside is full of bloom, of song. The monsoons will come again, the rains that will reconvert the desert into smiling fields. While the farmers dream of the crops they will raise, village maidens dream of a love which has in it peculiar qualities of frustration. The romance is artificial. It feeds on poetry equally artificial, though not quite devoid of an emotional regret, in a sort of make-believe, a dream world, that would not, cannot come true. Love in India is arranged. The ties of wedlock are forged of parental pow-wows.

India may be a land of riches, but it is also a land of poverty, and as one travels into wild country one can see nature in the raw.

It is a land of contrast all right. Taking Kashmir, for instance, one would have to travel many miles to find another place with the beauty of Kashmir.

Before the war I had the opportunity of travelling the Continent fairly well, along the Rhine and Italy, the lakes of my own country, and of Iceland, and I have spent a time in South Africa — but never have I seen a place quite so beautiful as Kashmir. If there is an approach to heaven from earth, then surely it must be Kashmir.

Well, Mrs. McCann, that is a little of the setting we find in India. I tried my best to paint on you a picture — to give you some idea of the country we are now in.

So saying, So long. I again say, don't worry. Chin up and keep smiling, and soon the day will come with the war just a memory, and back home to our respective countries, and to the ones that we hold dear.

With all best wishes, sincerely,
Frank Hurt.

Brown vs. Keyes For Lieutenant Governor?

BY GENE ALLEMAN

Now that the Alger-like story has been revived whereby Michigan-born Thomas E. Dewey, the small-town boy from Owosso who "made good" in the big city, has been nominated for the president of the United States, Michigan Republicans are settling down to brief and belated consideration of their own primary decision next Tuesday, July 11th.

That decision is whether the nomination of lieutenant governor, a person who significantly may become governor of Michigan next January, shall go to Dr. Eugene B. Keyes, the incumbent, or to Vernon J. Brown, who is now completing his sixth year as auditor general.

In that decision of the voters are several issues. Is Michigan ready to elevate the lieutenant governship to a position of greater responsibility and leadership akin to that of an "assistant governor"? In the event that the Republican governor would be appointed to a cabinet position at Washington, or if Senator Vandenberg or Senator Ferguson were chosen for a similar post, which man would make the best governor — Brown or Keyes? And, finally, does a preference by Kelly to have Brown serve as his "assistant" actively on the job at Lansing five days a week, constitute "boss dictation" and a political purge?"

Let's discuss the situation briefly.

The basic issue in the minds of Governor Kelly, who is going to head the state ticket in November, is whether Michigan is ready to elevate the office of lieutenant governor to a partnership equality with the office of governor.

To Mr. Keyes, the office is primarily a preparatory training and stepping stone to the governorship. To Brown, it would be a full-time responsibility which will require the holder to devote eight or more hours each day, five days or more each week, to the performance of state duties.

It is Governor Kelly's belief that Michigan is going to face a troublesome time in the post-war period. Reconversion of automobile plants, for example. Hundreds of thousands of returning servicemen will be looking to the state and federal government for guidance in their return to civilian usefulness. As a World War veteran himself, Kelly has a sentimental affection for war veterans. He wants to help them.

Furthermore, the increase in complexity of state government — now a "big business" that dis-

REV. E. C. DYKSTRA IS ORDAINED AT BARNARD CHURCH

PRESIDENT OF MUSKEGON CLASSIS READS INSTALLATION AND ORDINATION FOR CHURCHES OF THIS AREA.

The ordination and installation service of Ellsworth C. Hykstra was held at the Barnard Reformed Church at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening, June 28th. Rev. Chester Meengs, pastor of the Fifth Reformed Church of Muskegon and former pastor of the Atwood Reformed Church, presided and read the official installation service. As president of the Muskegon Classis which represents some 25 Reformed churches in the northern area of the state and also acting officially for the Reformed Church as a denomination, Rev. Meengs read the forms which included the vows of both church and pastor.

The choir of the Barnard Reformed Church sang an appropriate number, "In the Service of the King."

Rev. Gradus A. Aalberts, pastor of the Atwood Reformed Church delivered the sermon which was the main address of the occasion. His sermon, based on text, Eph. 5:1-2, was most inspir-

After the vows had been taken by the new pastor, Rev. William Van't Hof, pastor of the Third Reformed Church, Holland, and relative of Mr. Dykstra, gave the charge to the newly installed pastor which served as a challenge,

The CIO Political Action Committee—

Just off the Government Printing Press is the latest report of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives. The report "deals with the leadership of the CIO Political Action Committee, which is the authorized agency through which the Congress of Industrial Organizations itself is participating in the election campaigns of 1944" which has for its main objective the unseating in the coming elections of every member of Congress whose efforts have been directed toward the continuation of Constitutional Government for the welfare of this country.

In the fore part of the House Report, it is plainly pointed out that the Special Committee on Un-American Activities "does not challenge for one moment the right of organized labor to engage in political campaigns within the limits of the statutes which govern such activity." No Member of Congress, to my knowledge, questions the Americanism of the overwhelming majority of the rank and file members of the CIO unions. Millions of Union members don't stand in sympathy with Communism; but this cannot be said of thousands of CIO leaders who are carrying on the activities of the Political Action Committee throughout the country. The CIO Executive Board, which established the Political Action Committe is composed of 49 members; of those, 49 there are

FARMERS MUST SPRAY NOW FOR APPLE MAGGOT

A recent announcement from Ray Hutson, Entomology Department, Michigan State College, states that the first spray for apple maggot should be completed by July 11th. The usual spray materials can be used for this purpose — probably the best material will be lead arsenate at the usual rate for killing insect pests. The set of apples is not so great as last year, but we do expect a very high quality fruit as the growers have sprayed diligently.

The purchaser then files the completed certificate with his local War Price and Ration Board.

How to Be Warm Next Winter

You can make scarce fuel go further next winter by preparing your home for winter now, be you owner or merely a lease-holder, the Federal Housing Administration says; an FHA loan will enable you to borrow enough to pay for both materials and workmanship needed to insulate your home, to repair your heating plant, to install storm windows — up to as much as $2,500. You can borrow enough for any or all of these things without down payment, without security and with three years in which to pay, FHA says. Get best prices on jobs you want done, then get your local dealer or contractor to tell you where you can get an FHA title loan to cover the entire bill.

Some Foods Again Rationed

The OPA has restored rationing to best cuts of lamb in order to get better distribution among customers, and it has restored point values to certain types of cheese and canned asparagus, peas and tomatoes, which were unrationed for two weeks because of large stocks on hand.

OPA Names New Ceiling Prices

Ceiling prices have been established by OPA on watermelons, alfalfa hay, sweet peppers, and hothouse cucumbers, none of which has been under nationwide retail price control. Retail watermelon prices should decline substantially from last summer's figures. Alfalfa producers per ton ceiling prices range from $19 to $26.50. Ceilings on sweet peppers and hothouse cucumbers represent reductions at retail. OPA also has set maximum prices for the 1944 crop of red and black raspberries, dewberries and blackberries.

Jeeps for Farm Use

The Army jeep promises greater usefulness as an auxiliary work implement on a large farm than for general work on the average farm according to indications reported by Domestic Commerce, official publication of the Department of Commerce. Tests have been made on jeeps at the Tillage Machinery Laboratory, Auburn, Ala., and in connection with Pennsylvania State College. Perhaps half a million jeeps have been manufactured and more will continue to be made until the war ends.

National Restaurant Regulation

For the first time, public eating and drinking places will be covered by a national restaurant regulation July 31st, when they must post their April 4th to 10th, 1943, base period ceiling prices for 40 basic menu items served, OPA announces. However, a cup of coffee with sugar and cream may sell for no more than a nickel at any establishment that did not charge more than a nickel for it October 4 to 10, 1942.

Housewives Help Save Eggs

The extra egg-buying of American housewives has made it possible to save the 25 million dozen of eggs that were in danger of spoilage a few weeks ago for lack of storage space, War Food Administrator Marvin Jones said. Retail stores, newspapers and radio were of great help in calling attention to the problem, he said.

Prices on Low Cost Clothing

Retail prices on new low cost clothing items that meet specifications of WPB, as announced by the Office of Price Administration, will be: cotton house dresses, $1.49; women's cotton slips, 65 cents; men's printed, solid color and white shirts, $1.39; and men's shorts, 30c. WPB is allocating the fabrics for clothing items to be produced and distributed during July August and September.

These Things Are Hard to Find

Severe civilian shortages now exist in washtubs, alarm clocks, window screening and flashlights, WPB reports, with less severe shortages in flashlight batteries, clothes pins, double boilers, egg beaters, pails, radio tubes and umbrellas. Mild shortages exist in wood and coal stoves, thermos bottles, baby carriages, mops, rope, bedsprings and bobbie pins.

Round-Up

OPA announces that — retail ceiling prices recently established on certain farm tractor tires include $52.85 for 9-24 10-ply rear; $35 for 7.50-16 8-ply front; and $9.55 for 4.00-12 4-ply front . . . The stock of 30,000 new cars yet remaining in the U. S. July 1st was the equivalent of a three days' normal supply, and 7,000 have been allocated for July rationing . . . "T" gasoline coupons marked "2nd Qtr." issued as special rations and which do not expire until after June 30th, may be exchanged for third quarter "T" coupons.

WPB says two-tone shoes with other than leather soles may be made beginning September 1 . . Shortage of workers, and not material or machines, is holding up production of farm radio batteries, but production is expected to be improved by fall. Full responsibility for rationing and distributing new wtrucks, truck tractors, trailers and other commercial vehicles to essential users has been transferred to the Office of Defense Transportation . . . The linen toweling and sheeting situations continue to grow tighter . . . Dry cleaners report urgent need of wire garment hangers because paperboard hangers have proved costly and impractible.

WFA says — farmers and dairies may now purchase new milk cans for handling milk and milk products without purchase certificates . . . Government reserves of canned fish from the 1944 pack have been increased because of increased war requirements.

Before DDT, the new insecticide, may be recommended for general use for agricultural purposes many more tests must be completed as to its effects on insects, plants and higher animals, the Department of Agriculture says . . . Despite shoe-rationing, the American people have bought an average of 3.2 pairs of rationed and unrationed shoes annually, more than consumers in any other country, the Department of Commerce reports.

OPA announces that it may establish ceilings on wage rates for independent contractors for services rendered on farms, where the War Food Administration has established maximum wage rates of farm workers . . . Used car rationing is not planned at this time or for the future, so far as OPA knows . . . Unused farmers Pr-19 certificates held by dealers have the same standing as new certificates for the purchase of farm supplies, WPB says . . . Passenger travel for the first quarter of this year was 25.5 per cent over traffic in the same quarter last year, OWI reports . . . To insure travel facilities for disabled military, naval and merchant marine personnel, railroads may cancel reservations, space assignments or tickets and if necessary most cancel or discontinue passenger train service and refuse permission of passengers other than disabled personnel or attendants to board trains, ODT has announced.

at least 18 whose records clearly indicate that they follow the 'line' of the old American Communist Party with undeviating loyalty. Their records are outlined briefly in House Report 1311, and more detailed data on them is available in Washington files of the House Committee. These are the men who in the recent past have inspired the wave of sabotage strikes which interfered with our war production program — and such strikes continue.

We learn from the House Report that a majority (21) of the international unions affiliated with the CIO have entrenched Communist leadership. Back in 1938 and 1939, the House Committee endeavored to warn John L. Lewis and other CIO leaders that the Communists were making an inroad into their organization. It was not until February 20, 1944, that John L. Lewis — who had left the CIO in 1940 — in a public statement concerning Communists in the CIO confirmed what the House Committee uncovered five years earlier and which still stands today, in which he said in speaking of Philip Murray and Sidney Hillman that "both of them have got to play ball with the Communists now, or die."

It is well for us to remember that the announced intention of Communist Party U.S.A., early this year, to dissolve as a political party and to take on such name as the American Communist Political Association is not a renunciation of Marxian Communism, as they themselves have publicly admitted. The immediate significance of the Party's dissolution, according to the House Report, is that during the coming elections the Communists will throw their entire weight behind the CIO Political Action Committee. They will attempt "by stealth and subterfuge" to do through the Political Action Committee what they have failed to accomplish when functioning as a Political Party, namely, to gain political leadership over millions of voters and thus to elect men to Congress who will respond to their every demand, with the result that in years to come they plan we will have drifted away from our Representative form of Government set up by our founding fathers. It is alarming that so many among us think "it cannot happen here" that somehow, come what may, Constitutional Government, under which we have become the greatest nation on the face of the earth over the past 150 years, will always remain with us.

The Communist conspirators under Sidney Hillman's CIO leadership present one of the most subversive movements this country has ever known. Let me point out, too, that when you view the so-called voting charts of 'blacklisted" Members of Congress, prepared for extensive distribution by the CIO Political Action Committee, that more than 75 per cent constitutes a heavy majority. In other words, my friends, the legislative Branch of our Government does not meet with the approval of CIO leaders. Communists, like all totalitarians, have always looked with contempt upon the legislative (or parliamentary, as they call it) branch of our government. For many years the official program of the Communist Party of the United States contained this statement — "Communism repudiates parliamentarism as the form of the future; its aim is to destroy parliamentarism."

With $10,000 for each Congressional District throughout the country at their disposal with which to bring about the unseating of incumbent Members of Congress, who do not succumb to their pressure, the Political Action Committee of the CIO hopes to gain its objectives through the spreading of misleading statements, deliberate untruths and the like. When you read and hear their propaganda, I hope you will bear in mind the caliber and type of men who are the organizers and leaders of this campaign. Personally, I cannot bring myself to believe that the rank and file of American voters and our Northern Michigan labor will ever follow such un-American leadership. There is too much fundamental Americanism in our make-up and over the entire Nation.

A Government of, by and for all the people must be preserved; otherwise our boys are making the supreme sacrifice in vain.

Why a Farmer Should Buy and Keep War Bonds

by G. W. Hedlund
Head, Dept. of Agricultural Economics
University of Pennsylvania

THERE are many compelling reasons why farmers should buy War Bonds. But there is one reason, often overlooked during times like the present, which I believe is fundamental to the individual farmer. That reason is: Farmers should buy War Bonds now to protect their personal financial position against falling prices at some future time.

The typical farmer has most if not all of his funds invested in his farming business. In other words, he has investments in real estate, livestock, equipment and other items that go to make up the usual farm business. Relatively few farmers have sizable investments outside of the farm. Farm investments are excellent hedges against inflation. By that I mean that when prices in general rise, usually the prices of farms, livestock and equipment also rise to some extent, so that the purchasing power of the investment changes but little. Therefore investments in farms retain their purchasing power better than investments in fixed dollar securities in times of rising prices. It is for this reason that many nonfarmers have been purchasing farms during recent years. By so doing they are attempting to buy something whose price will increase as prices in general go up.

But investments in farm real estate and other farm property do not offer protection or hedges against price declines. When prices of farm products decline, the prices of farm land and other farm property also decline. To make matters worse, net farm income declines more than almost anything else. Farmers must look elsewhere to protect themselves against deflation or price declines.

A relatively small share of a typical farmer's investments is in bonds, mortgages or other fixed dollar investments. Presumably such securities maintain their dollar value regardless of the trend in prices of other things. Therefore, good bonds offer protection or a hedge against deflation or price declines.

The fact that most farmers are well hedged against inflation but are rather poorly hedged against deflation is one very sound reason why farmers should purchase War Bonds at this time. By purchasing Bonds they will partially hedge their finances against decreases in prices. They are already hedged against price increases. By being hedged on both sides, individual farmers will be in the safest position to weather the future, regardless of the trend in prices.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

I want farmers to know I have seen 85 years. I have owned farms in New York, Michigan, Iowa, and North Dakota and the surest and safest and the most money I ever made was in hay and cows. Save all the hay you can, and raise all your little calves. The other day I saw a truckload of little calves going to market. I felt like using the shotgun. But too many get their living that way—using their setter in a truck. They can't pitch hay or raise cattle any more. I want to tell you nothing takes the place of a good beefstew at 48 cents a pound. Now you old-timers, if you want to help win the war, pitch hay and raise stock. The summer I was seventy-eight I pitched 35 loads of hay onto the hay wagon and I didn't have to drink any booze of any kind for a bracer, either. Keep off the road and make hay. Advice of burses millions of dollars each year — has imposed tremendous burdens on the governor. Kelly's first move to decentralize the load was to create with legislative sanction, the office of business manager. Dr. Robert Ford, University of Michigan executive, was appointed to this post.

BROWN OR KEYES?

Now comes a further recognition of the problem by the governor's proposal that the lieutenant governor, whose compensation is $3,500 a year, should become the governor's right-hand man as an "assistant governor" and accordingly, should serve the public full-time — eight hours a day, and 40 hours or more a week — instead of the present custom of one or more days a week.

Obviously, then, if the lieutenant governor is to become a "partner" of the governor in administration of governmental affairs, the man should merit the requirements of a partner — he should enjoy the confidence of the governor as constituting one-half of the team. Brown's judgment, seasoned by long experience in the state legislature and six years as auditor general, has won the respect of all state officials including the governor. Keyes' judgment has been unpredictable, frequently in direct opposition to Kelly and others. Brown has the the support of all Republican office-holders except Charles Zirgler who has announced a policy of neutrality. Keyes retaliates with charges of "hossism" and "purge"; Kelly says he is a leader who is responsible to the voters at the polls and hence is no "hoss."

And now for the speculation that the lieutenant governor may become governor of Michigan after next January 1st.

The Chicago Republican convention was run by Republican governors. Two governors received the nominations — Governor Dewey of New York and Governor Bricker of Ohio. Governor Kelly was admitted into the inner circles.

There is about a 50-50 chance that Dewey may be the next president of the United States. If so, he may invite Senator Vandenberg or Senator Ferguson to serve in his cabinet. In fact, Senator Ferguson was introduced in Chicago last week as the "next attorney general' — a flattering reference to his success as the Detroit graft prosecutor.

It was Kelly who was first proposed for the U.S. Senate as the opponent of Democrat Prentiss M. Brown. When Kelly acceded to demands of the party leaders that he run instead for governor, Ferguson became the candidate and the rest is history.

Now when a vacancy occurs in the U. S. Senate, the power of appointment rests with the governor of the State. Would Brown appoint Kelly to serve at Washington. He is interested, however, in the man who serves the state as governor — especially during the coming post-war years.

As to the third topic, that of "hossism" in party politics, we confess a personal conviction that strong leadership is needed to administer anything well whether a private business or a political party. It's more a matter of getting a good boss or a bad boss — one who leads benevolently and preferably one who is responsible direct to the people at the ballot box.

If Governor Kelly is the boss, then he will remain a boss only and if the voters of Michigan, acting at the polls, prefer his leadership to that of someone else.

The question which Michigan Republicans should answer next Tuesday is simply this: Who is the best man to serve Michigan as "assistant governor" and possibly as governor — Vernon J. Brown or Dr. Eugene B. Keyes? Anything else will be emotional smoke-screen beclouding the real issue.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"The men overseas don't mince any words about the way they want to find this country when they come marching home... do they, Judge?"

"They certainly don't, Herb... and they shouldn't. They're doing a masterful job fighting over there to protect our rights and they have good license to expect us to protect theirs back here at home. One thing they're mighty clear on is their stand on prohibition."

"Their position on that subject was stated very emphatically in a poll taken recently among American service men in England by the British Institute of Public Opinion. When hundreds of men were asked point blank how they would vote on prohibition, 85% of them stated, in unmistakable terms, that they would vote against it. There's no douht about it, Herb... the men overseas don't want any action taken on that subject while they're away."

"And they're 100% right, Judge, because I know how I felt when I came home after the last war—only to learn that we had been over there fighting for so impractical a thing as Prohibition."

What The GI Bill Of Rights Gives To Vets Of This War

WASHINGTON—Here's what the GI Bill of Rights means to your boy.— and your neighbor — when he comes home from war.

The bill means there will be no more crippled apple peddlers when peace comes to the world; that there will be no repetition of the tragic days following the last war, when forgotten heroes sold their medals for a mouthful of food!

It assures your boy a full share of the traditional American opportunity which he is offering his life to defend.

The details of the bill:

Perhaps your boy was taken out of school, to learn new, grim lessons: the art of killing. Now he must pick up the threads of education. The GI bill does that for him.

If he was 24 or under when he left school, it is assumed his education was interrupted. He picks the school he wants to go to. He notifies the nearest veterans administration representative.

The VA pays his tuition at school, if he meets the school's academic standards. It will pay the actual cost of his education, up to $500; and it will give him $50 a month to live on ($75 if he has dependents) while he is studying.

Perhaps your boy is a professional man, or a skilled technician. He may need a refresher course. He can get that for one year.

If it is general education he wants, he can get one year if he's been in service 90 days or more. If he qualifies for further studies at the end of that year, he can continue his education, in direct ratio to his years of service, up to four years.

Perhaps your boy wants to buy a little home and settle down.

He goes to his local banker, building and loan association, or other agency. He notifies the veterans' administration and, if the VA decides the deal is a good one, it will guarantee a part of the loan.

The guarantee will not be more than 50 per cent of the loan, and not more than a maximum of $2,000. Thus if your boy borrows $1,000, 50 per cent or $500, is guaranteed. If he borrows $4,000, 50 per cent, or $2,000 is guaranteed. But $2,000 is the top, and so, if he borrows $5,000 or more, he still gets a guarantee of only $2,000.

The government will pay the interest on the guaranteed portion of the loan for the first year. No interest rates may exceed 4 per cent.

Or perhaps your boy wants a job. He registers with the veterans' placement service of the United States Employment Service, which is ordered to see that he and other veterans get first crack at whatever jobs are open. Directing the service is the veterans' administrator, and the law is expected to put real teeth into the placement service.

If he can't find a job, he'll need money.

The mustering-out pay bill, passed last winter, gives him up to $300 in pay, distributed in three monthly installments, when he leaves the army. The GI bill follows that up with 52 weeks unemployment compensation, which the veteran can claim in any 52 weeks during the first two years following his last payment of mustering-out pay, for a possible total over-all protection of 15 months.

The rate of pay is fixed at $20 a week.

The bill makes $500,000,000 available for construction of hospitals to care for wounded and sick veterans.

The Veterans' Administration is designated a war agency with priorities second only to the War and Navy departments.

If dissatisfied with the type of discharge given him upon leaving the service the veteran can request a hearing before a board of review and can, if his position is proper, secure a new certificate outlining his military career.

Representative of the several recognized veteran groups, including the American Legion, will be permitted to serve in hospitals and institutions caring for war disabled and advise veterans as to benefits due them under existing federal law.

White collar men, the so-called self-employed, including physicians and lawyers, and farmers, long regarded as independent because they work the soil, will be entitled to unemployment compensation until they re-establish themselves in their former professions and until their earnings total $20 a week.

This element, the Congress believes, will have been rehabilitated before the maximum of 52 weeks' compensation to which most of them will be entitled has been exhausted. Those able to secure small private loans will be paid the difference between it and $20 a week.

AAA NOTES

Farmers are receiving checks from the Commodity Credit Corporation for the surplus potatoes from their 1943 crop.

Through the efforts of the AAA, the CCC purchased the surplus potatoes from growers at support prices and processed them into dairy feed.

A total of 25 cars were shipped from Charlevoix County which will return $30,304.00 to the potato growers. Without this support price program, there would have been no market for these potatoes and the farmer would have had the loss.

This amount, combined with $35,000.00 AAA Farm Payments and $18,000.00 Dairy Feed Payments made by the AAA, reach a total of over $83,000.00 which has been distributed through the AAA to farmers throughout this county during 1944.

He Isn't One to Miss A Meal for Any Sniper

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY BEACHHEAD FORCES IN ITALY.—Lieut. L. F. Edwards of Reigate, Surry, is a fast man when it comes to thinking about food.

Before dawn he crawled to the crest of a hill, dragging a telephone with him, and when daylight came he relayed information back to his artillery unit that resulted in seven direct hits on a big house which the Germans held and which was causing serious trouble to the forces on the beachhead.

After the house was demolished Edwards tried to get back to his original position, but was pinned down by a German sniper and forced to lie there with no chance of getting back in time for lunch. Edwards solved the difficulty by picking up the telephone and ordering lunch. The lunch, with an additional 50 feet of wire, was attached to the telephone line and Edwards hauled in his own lunch hand over hand.

In the afternoon it began to rain, and when Edwards saw the sniper remove the telescopic sights from his rifle and begin to wipe them off he made a break for it and got back for dinner.

LAKE BOAT RECORDS SURE TO BE BROKEN

Ore, Coal, Stone and Grain Carriers Meeting War Needs.

Although final figures will not be compiled until late next week, it appears certain that the Great Lakes bulk cargo fleet for the third consecutive month this season had broken all previous records for movement of iron ore, coal and grain.

On the basis of figures given in the current issue of the Bulletin of the Lake Carriers' Association, total cargoes of these essential war commodities for the season to July 1st were estimated at about 59,000,000 net tons.

In the former record year of 1942, the total for the same period was 57,154,110 tons. Actual figures for the present season showed a total of 55,360,184 net tons already delivered prior to the last week of navigation in June.

HOME CANNING TO AID THE STRICKEN NATIONS

Food As Important As Armament Says A&P Buying Head.

NEW YORK—Continuance of their war-time role of preserving food from American farms by home canning, the nation's housewives will not only help bring an earlier end to war but lay the foundation for a better peace.

With thousands of persons homeless in areas liberated from Axis rule in both European and Pacific war zones, the role which food will play becomes as important as that of armaments, Harvey A. Baum, head of the produce-buying affiliate of A&P Food Stores, one of the nation's leading food distributors, said today.

While none of the foood canned in homes will actually reach refugees in the rapidly expanding liberated areas, each home-filled container will release an equivalent amount of food in the actual war zones, Mr. Baum pointed out.

ORGANIZED CRIME IS NO THREAT NOW --- CAPT. MULBAR

LIEUT. COL. MILTON GEARING TELLS OF NAZI PRISONERS IN AMERICAN PRISON CAMPS AND GIVES FIGURES

BY LOIS SCHAEFFER
OF THE COURIER

Organized crime, a vice still rampant in these United States, no longer threatens the people of Michigan because of the effective cooperation exercised among all the law enforcing agencies of the state, declared Capt. Harold Mulbar of the Michigan State Police, E. Lansing. Capt. Mulbar was among the many outstanding state officials present at the twentieth annual session of the Michigan Association of Chiefs of Police held at the Belvedere Hotel in Charlevoix Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week. The conference was in full swing as the Courier went to press, but here are the main features of the program so far:

Startling information concerning German prisoners of war was revealed in a talk by Lieut. Col. Milton Gearing of the Sixth Service Command, Detroit. The Nazi theory of unity has been proven a myth, once the German prisoners experience American freedom of expression in our prison camps. Hitler would have one more item to add to his already-too-long list of perils threatening the Third Reich, were he aware that 10 per cent of his mastercrnce soldiers interned in this country, hope for a German defeat, that 15 per cent openly admit their unequivocal belief in an Allied victory, and that 20 per cent are resigned to possible defeat. The Colonel told the conference that despite the tide of Allied offensives, 30 per cent of the prisoners still adhere to the exploded theory of Aryan supremacy, and 25 per cent, although less certain of an Axis victory,

CHERRY HARVEST IS OFF TO A GOOD START THIS WEEK

SWEET CHERRY SEASON IS NEARLY ENDED—NO RAIN IS DELAYING MATURITY OF LATER VARIETIES.

The cherry picking season has now started. The response for pickers thus far has been very gratifying. Orchards having Early Richmond trees are now nearly picked, likewise the sweet cherry season is nearly ended. The main crop of Montmorencies is ready this week or will be by Monday, July 17th.

Over 75 Victory Farm Workers were transported to the Wilkinson orchards this last week. This week Monday over 100 pickers started at the Millspaugh orchard. During the week more orchards will start, so that by the end of the week it is estimated there will be over 750 pickers working in the county.

All cherry growers are asked to inform the county agent's office in Boyne City by telephone if they are in need of further assistance. Kindly call before noon so that the labor staff will have the afternoon to make the necessary arrangements. Many folks from other counties are respond-

U. S. S. PEARY HAS BEEN AROUND

No Safe Harbor Ship

Viewed in the light of her past voyages — from the stormy North Atlantic to the skyscraper ground swells of the Pacific, Charlevoix's smooth-surfaced harbor must have seemed tame to Lake Survey craft U. S. S. Peary, which has been in and out of here several times this spring.

Few remember the S. S. Peary that carried the Byrd-McMillan-National Geographic research expedition to the icy port of Etah, Greenland in 1925. Pioneer Arctic flier, Admiral Byrd, then a commander in the Navy, hoped to travel as far north as possible by sea — then fly over the North Pole in planes brought along for that purpose. Old Man Winter wrecked those plans, however, as impossible weather grounded the planes, forcing the expedition back to New York.

Important doings within the hold of the Peary led by her commander, Eugene F. McDonald, wealthy yachtsman and owner of Zenith Radio, made history in the field of naval communications even though Byrd and McMillan failed to cross the Pole. From the bridge of the Peary anchored at Etah, Greenland, McDonald reached the U.S.S. Seattle, flagship of the Pacific Fleet, 12,000 miles away and had six Eskimos sing native songs to the men aboard the Seattle to break their monotonous diet of south sea melodies. From that date, the Navy no longer questioned the effectiveness of short-wave radio for long-range communication.

In addition to her illustrious history, the Peary, under the ownership of a Mr. Bramley, president of the Trinidad Asphalt Co. of Cleveland, O., set off in search of a new island in the Pacific. Before she became the Peary, the ship belong to the leisure class, where, under the name of Winona, she was a luxury yacht belonging to Mr. Goddard of New York.

Originally built for the French government during World War I for use as a minesweeper, she wasn't completed until the time of the armistice. Since the U. S. government had sponsored her construction, she became American property, embarking on the interesting career, which is hers.

In her latest role in the U. S. Lake Survey Service, the Peary carries up-to-the-minute navigating and surveying equipment, including the gyroscope compass, radio direction finder, ship-shore telephone, and sonic depth finder as well as complete "sweeping" apparatus. The Peary is 145 feet long with 22-foot beam. She has a draft of 15 feet and is propelled by a single engine, triple-expansion, of 600 horse-power.

Richard H. Mason, formerly of Charlevoix, has enlisted in the Navy. He is now stationed at the Great Lakes Training Station, Great Lakes, Ill.

STICK THRU LONG HOT EVENING TO WRITE BALLOTS

REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT AT HIGH TIDE AS CITIZENS PUT ASIDE DISCOMFORT TO VOTE CHOICE

Over four hundred people met Monday night in the high school gymnasium in what turned out to be one of the most representative school board elections Charlevoix has ever known.

A July evening in the gymnasium is not the most delightful place. It was hot, it was stuffy, and the longer they tarried, the hotter and stuffier it became. The meeting lasted three hours with every elector sticking until the last vote was cast, the final reports were in, and the adjournment motion made and supported.

No finer evidence could be had that representative government is still very much alive in this country, and those elected can take up their duties secure in the knowledge that they hold office by the will of a fair cross-section of this district's electors.

Nominations and elections were as follows:

Harold Withers nominated and elected to a one-year term by acclamation.

Mrs. Walter Bergeon and Harold Miller were nominated for one year term. Votes cast numbered 372. Of this number Mrs. Bergeon received 258, Mr. Miller 104, and 10 were spoiled.

Bonnie Nickerson and Oscar Stroud were nominated for three-year term. Votes cast numbered 348. Of this number Mr. Nickerson received 300, Mr. Stroud 46, and 2 were spoiled.

Elmer Hawley and Harold Miller were nominated for three-year term. Votes cast numbered 328. Of this number Mr. Hawley received 283, Mr. Miller 43, and 2 were spoiled.

MEN ON FURLOUGH TO GET MORE GASOLINE

OPA To Liberalize Its Gasoline Policy Toward Servicemen.

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The OPA will liberalize its gasoline rationing policy toward servicemen on furlough within the next two weeks, Rep. Errett P. Scrivner (R), Kan., said. He also said he had been notified by his Washington office.

Scrivner said that furloughed servicemen will receive five gallons of gasoline for the first three days of a leave and one gallon per day for each day thereafter under the new plan.

Servicemen have received five gallons for their entire furlough up to the present time.

Report On Egypt, Persia, And Points East

Garden Party In Cairo

For Pfc. Jay Oliver, recently returned from Hamadan, Iran, life has moved so swiftly the past two years that it "seems like a moving picture, but the most wonderful picture ever made."

Jay left Charlevoix April 7, 1942, getting his 13-week basic training at Camp Robinson, Ark. Going into the medical department, he was then sent to Macon, Ga., for further training. In October, 1942, he was sent to Iran, going by way of Captetown, South Africa, due to the fact that at that time the Mediterranean was closed to Allied shipping. The sea trip was not entirely uneventful—they were chased at one time for 36 hours by submarines in the South Atlantic.

Returning, Jay traveled from Hamadan to Cairo by truck convoy over what is probably the roughest, dustiest, hotest and coldest motor route in the world: scorching, arid below-sea level sand deserts and high, frigid, rocky and treacherous mountains.

From Cairo Jay's papers read "by air," but at Casablanca higher priorities grounded him and for two weeks he cooped in a former Italian prison, and at the end of that two weeks he was glad to forego the "by air" stuff in favor of any sort of transportation that would get him home.

One incident that stands out above many others for Jay is a party in the home of a wealthy Egyptian woman in Cairo where he was one of a hundred and fifty guests. Present in this gorgeous palace of rich mosaic ceilings, gold-armed chairs and vast formal gardens studded with royal palms were the U. S. minister, the Persian ambassador to Egypt, the English ambassador, Australian ambassador, and Lady Kellern of London. There were also 24 other American soldiers, 25 English officers, nurses, and other army personnel and 25 Free French army representatives.

Jay says he didn't see any Persian souvenirs with a "made in Cincinnati" imprint on them, but he does know that some of the

SHOES TO BE SCARCER ACCORDING TO OPA

Production And Supply Heading Toward Lowest Point In Years.

Shoes are going to become scarcer on shelves of stores, as the production and supply situation heads toward the lowest point in years.

Offsetting rumors in the shoe trade that shoe rationing would be ended September 1st, the Office of Price Administration informed shoe merchants that shoe rationing would continue until there is a marked improvement in the supply situation. No indication of an increased supply is apparent for the rest of the year. Latest inventory figures show inventories declined more than 53 million pairs in 1943.

Based on latest estimates of 1944 production, a further decline of up to 25 million pairs is indicated for this year, drawing the total supply of shoes in the nation's stores at the end of 1944 to the lowest point in years.

FROM HYMNOLOGY TO CROQUET

Camp Nourishes Spirit And Flesh

By Eileen Hagle As Told to Lois Schaeffer

Nourishing the spirit and the flesh at one time is a substantial task, but that seems to be the purpose of the Methodist Youth Camp at Lake Louise, situated about 15 miles east of Boyne Falls, and according to Eileen Hagle and Linda Lou Bowman, who spent a week there beginning June 25, it does a pretty good job of both. Although young people between the ages of 12 and 24 are eligible to attend, for obvious reasons the average age of the 170 campers this season was 15, and for even more obvious reasons the feminine element was decidedly predominant.

Religious instruction takes place in the morning before the campers get a chance to become too spirited and includes classes in Hymnology, Evangelism, and Bible. Archery, baseball, boating, badminton, swimming, dramatic groups, orchestra, nature hikes, set the afternoon pace for the energy-ridden boys and girls, and croquet is included for those who forgot to eat their Wheatles.

WEEKLY NEWS DIGEST FROM OWI RURAL PRESS SECTION

Black Marketeers Sent to Jail

In the first five months of 1944, the Office of Price Administration Enforcement Program against the gasoline black market sent 28 car owners to jail, convicted 159 car owners of buying gasoline with counterfeit or stolen coupons or without coupons, took away rations from 775 car owners, suspended gasoline selling rights of 1,538 filling stations, put 156 filling stations out of business and gave jail sentences to 236 counterfeiters, peddlers and gasoline dealers.

Former Farmer Saves the Day

A former Illinois farmer, a Sergeant, solved a transportation problem for his Marine buddies on Saipan, the Navy Department reports. It was impossible to haul much-needed ammunition up the rugged, steep hills by trucks and carry the wounded back. As the Sergeant suggested, a detail of Marines, who as civilians had handled live stock, were sent out to catch stray oxen. Within two hours they had a regular service into the hills using hand-made native two-wheel carts drawn by the oxen.

BREAD IS NOT TO BE RATIONED IS CLAIM

1944's Billion Bushel Wheat Crop Should Meet Requirements.

WASHINGTON — Fears of bread rationing were officially dissipated when the Agricultural Department reported that this year's prospective billion-bushel record wheat crop should meet all requirements with enough left over to build up sizeable reserves.

A departmental survey of the national wheat situation disclosed that this year's carryover stocks will be at least 50,000,000 bushels larger than originally estimated.

At the same time, the department said the 1944 harvest should be ample to supply food and industrial needs equal to this year's. Livestock feed requirements probably will be reduced to about half the amount consumed this year.

MICHIGAN OUT-OF-DOORS

Playground News of Field and Stream

Mussel Dredging Dies

LANSING — Michigan's one-time half million dollar mussel dredging industry has given up the ghost. For the first time, taking of mussels in the month of July in waters of southern counties is prohibited.

A five-year closed season order of the conservation commission is now in effect. It was issued on a showing that mussels were seriously depleted in southern Michigan waters and that an extended period of protection was necessary to give them a chance to re-establish themselves.

The conservation department at one time issued as many as 2,500 licenses annually for the taking of mussels, shells of which were used in making buttons.

Deer In Every County

LANSING — There are deer in every county in Michigan, now, and the time is approaching when the legislature may be asked to establish special open seasons in downstate areas where the animals cause excessive crop damage.

Such special seasons already have been established in Allegan County.

Conservation commissioners, leaving dates of 1944 deer seasons unchanged from last year, were furnished a glimpse of things to come at their June meeting. The commissioners were told that, in Livingston County and adjoining areas, deer have increased until they cause considerable damage to farm crops.

Department game men predict that there will be public demand, sometime in the future, for the opening of such areas to rigidly controlled hunting.

Two-thirds of the American-owned waters of the Great Lakes are in Michigan.

Protects Muskrats

LANSING — Michigan's 1944 mink-trapping regulations, unchanged from last season, are established to protect muskrats.

The trapping season in the upper peninsula from November 1 to 30, inclusive; in northern counties of the lower peninsula, west of Saginaw Bay, from November 15 to December 15, inclusive; and in southern counties of the lower peninsula, including all of Huron County, from December 1 to December 31, inclusive.

Opening of the mink trapping season is delayed in southern counties to give muskrats a better chance. Both species are taken in the same traps, usually under water. It is difficult to trap either species without taking both. Delayed opening of the mink trapping season gives muskrats time to get into winter quarters.

Average value of the Michigan muskrat crop is one million dollars; the mink crop, $200,000.

The all-time record lake trout, caught last year out of Marquette, weighed 53 pounds.

Next meeting of the state conservation commission will be held in Ironwood, July 16-17.

Twenty miles an hour is the speed limit in all Michigan state parks unless otherwise posted.

Pheasant Hunters Lose Two Counties

LANSING — Grand Traverse and Leelanau counties will be closed to pheasant hunters next fall, in addition to Alcona, Benzie, Mason, and Wexford counties, closed last season, and all of the upper peninsula.

Open season in other counties below the Straits will be from October 15 to November 15, inclusive.

The Michigan legislature, in 1855, passed a law which permitted the formation of companies for the running, driving, booming, and rafting of logs, timber, lumber, and other such floatables, on streams of the state.

Allegan's Antlerless Season Limited to 300 in '44

LANSING—Limit of 300 hunters has been placed on Allegan County's special antlerless deer season, next December 1 to 10 inclusive. The 800 limit of the 1943 special gun season was a potentially too-heavy concentration of firepower in the opinion of the conservation commission.

Special permits for the antlerless deer season will again be issued to licensed hunters selected by lot from those making application.

Hungarian Partridge Gets Five-Year Grace

LANSING — An additional five-year period of grace has been extended to the Hungarian partridge now present in Michigan by conservation commission action in prohibiting the taking of the exotic species before October 1, 1949. Present protection dates from 1941. Sportsmen and farmers, questioned this spring, thought there had been little change or perhaps a slight decrease in numbers of hunkies during the last year.

Land settlement on Michigan's jackpine plains started in earnest about 1875. The town of Beaver Lake was established in 1871, Ogemaw Spring in 1872, and Damon in 1875.

There are 262 "Mud lakes," so-named, in Michigan.

Pheasants Don't Scare

LANSING — Pheasants don't scare easily, and the conservation department sometimes issues shooting permits to farmers if damage caused by the birds is excessive.

Suggested device to scare pheasants away from corn, once ears in "in the milk," or from vegetable gardens, are pieces of shiny tin suspended a few inches above ground by strong string tied to leaning stakes or stretched wire placed along vulnerable sides of fields or gardens.

Complaints of pheasant damage are more numerous this season than has been the case in any previous year.

Eagles Banded

ALLEGAN — First banding of young American eagles in the Allegan area was done recently by Arnold O. Haugen of the state conservation department, in charge of the Swan Creek wildlife experiment station near here.

Two young birds were banded in a nest atop a 58-foot sugar maple on an island in Lake Allegan. The nest is nearly six feet in diameter. Food scraps in the nest were mainly fish, believed to be carp, and the hind leg of a cottontail.

MANISTEE—Windstorm damage was heavy early this week at Harrietta state fish hatchery, east of here, and a crew of men is engaged in clearing up debris, removing felled trees, and reroofing small buildings.

Reduce Drownings

Because drownings reduce the manpower potential, the department gives some advice:

Under no condition exceed the passenger capacity of the boat that is used. Do not use an unseaworthy boat. Do not go on the water when a storm is approaching or when the water is rough. Do not wear boots or other hampering clothing when in a boat. Do not purposely rock a boat or permit any horseplay by other boat occupants.

If, unfortunately, a boat capsizes, stay with it. Secure a firm-hand-hold and wait for help or drift ashore with the craft. If there are two persons in a boat that capsizes, they should hold hands across the bottom of the boat. Do not jump overboard to retrieve a lost oar without first dropping anchor; the boat may drift away faster than its occupants can swim. Never stand up in a boat to hoist anchor, change position or cast. Do not put a large motor on a small boat. Carry a life preserver or buoyant cushion in the boat.

A western meadow lark was seen recently near Munith in Jackson County, by Charles T. Black of the conservation department. Similar in appearance to its eastern cousin, the western species has a richer song. Not often seen in southern Michigan, the bird is reported more frequently in the western end of the northern peninsula.

The sale of eggs, milk, butter, native fruits and vegetables by farmers is permitted in Michigan state parks. Such foods must conform to state food laws and the articles offered for sale must have been produced by the vendors. All other vending or peddling in state parks is prohibited.

Collecting of wildflowers, peeling of bark, carving or chopping of trees, cutting branches, driving nails in trees, digging ground from roots, or the removal of trees, shrubs, or plants is unlawful in Michigan state parks.

A well-managed woodlot is a distinct economic asset and may contribute as much to farm income in Michigan as does a similar acreage of crop or pasture land.

The deer herd in Michigan occupies about two-thirds of the area of the state, or approximately 34,500 square miles.

Tagged Lake Trout

GRAND MARAIS — A 20½-inch tagged lake trout taken recently in Lake Superior by James McDonald of Grand Marais was one of 700 hatchery-reared lake trout released in Munising Bay on May 13, 1941, according to records of the conservation department's institute for fisheries research. At time of tagging, the fish was 10¾ inches long and weighed about four ounces. It had traveled about 75 miles in a northeasterly direction since its release three years ago.

Marauding Bears

MARQUETTE — Marauding black bears in Menominee and Delta counties are adding to the trials of conservation officers. Four Lake Township, Menominee County, farms have been raided recently by bears that attacked livestock, and a 350-pound black bear was shot by Eddie Olson near Isabella, Delta County, after it reportedly chased his wife and child.

Bears are a special problem in the two counties because many farms are pushed deep into forests on the tops of moraines and the livestock is more inviting than the natural food that bears find in forested country or swamplands.

There is a year-'round open season on bears in Menominee and Baraga counties in the upper peninsula, and farmers elsewhere can shoot bears that threaten livestock.

In 1881 the Michigan Legislature first took drastic steps to control methods of deer hunting. Previously, the only restrictions imposed had regulated lengths of hunting seasons.

Dollar estimates of the value of Michigan's wild-fur crop compare favorably with the annual production of rye, grapes, clover, or alfalfa.

The first Michigan state fish hatchery was built at Crystal Springs near Pokagon, Cass County, in 1873. The "hatching house" had a capacity of 1,000,000 eggs.

The puff adder, or blow snake, native to Michigan, is entirely harmless despite its fearsome appearance.

Hemlock trees over 600 years old have been found, but maturity is usually reached in 150 to 200 years.

1944's Smallest Fire Loss

LANSING — Smallest forest fire loss of the 1944 season to date was recorded last week when three fires burned a total of one acre, the conservation department reports.

The northlands are greener than usual now and forest fire crews are taking advantage of the lull to clean up fire lines, improve the grounds around fire towers, and fill in washouts on roads through forests.

A total of 11,723 acres has been burned over so far this season in 682 fires. The total loss last season was 18,563 acres in 723 fires.

Bird Dog Trials

LANSING — Grand national grouse championship trials, outstanding bird dog event of the kind in the country, are to be held in early November on the Gladwin state game refuge.

The event will bring to Michigan dogs that have won in sectional competition. Handlers who urged selection of the Gladwin refuge for the 1944 event, because of the greater likelihood of finding birds, believe that next November's event may prove so bad been attacked by a fox is bees will become as famous as those near Grand Junction, Tennessee, where comparable quail trials have been held for more than 40 years. First grand championship grouse trials were held last year near Jersey Shore, Pa.

Conservation department game men will survey and clear courses on the Gladwin refuge for the event.

John M. Hadaway of Flint is president of the Grand National Grouse Field Trial Association which will stage the trials.

Fox Attacks Fawn

VANDERBILT — A fawn that had been attacked by a fox is being nursed back to health at Pigeon River state forest headquarters near here.

The unusual incident, and the animal's identity, are vouched for by Al Wood of Vanderbilt and Charles Monger of Afton, members of a department of agricultural blister rust crew. The fox fawn, away when discovered and the fawn [illegible] about the check.

Conservation department game men declare that the [illegible] attack by a fox [illegible] their records.

The Michigan [illegible] of [illegible] was inaugurated in 1913 and put under the jurisdiction of the conservation department in 1921. By 1925, first year definite attendance records were kept, it was estimated that 550,000 persons, or 11 in every hundred of Michigan's population, visited the state parks.

Where to Find Fish

Yellow perch are by far the most common fish in the shelters placed in deeper water; rock bass show a gradual increase in numbers inhabiting a shelter as the depth of water decreases; young bass show a preference for shelters placed in five feet of water; shelters placed at a depth of 15 feet harbor about seven times as many fish as those placed on five-foot contours; the shelters at 10-foot depth offer cover for about twice as many fish as do those at the five-foot depth.

Michigan's first hunting license law was enacted in 1913. It provided that any person 17 years of age or over must procure a license to hunt protected game and birds, but it did not apply to persons hunting in the county in which they lived.

BIG CHECK

Louis M. Nims, state commissioner of revenue, took a second look at a $1,769,142 check from the Michigan Bell Telephone Company as its semi-annual property tax payment, earmarked by the Constitution for the Primary School Fund. Its tax of $3,538,284 is the largest payment into the Primary Fund and is paid in lieu of local levies. The company's total tax bill for 1943 was over $14,000,000.

Weir on Ocqueoc River north of Rogers City in Presque Isle county is used to remove sea lampreys moving upstream to spawn. About 200 of these eel-like creatures, 18 to 30 inches long, are destroyed nightly. These saltwater predators moved into the Great Lakes in the early 1920's through the Welland canal, by-passing Niagara Falls. They often destroy fish to which they attach themselves, sucking the blood. Twenty per cent of the lake trout taken at Rogers City have showed scars of lamprey attacks.

Lampreys Prey on Fish

ROGERS CITY — As many as 200 sea lampreys have been taken in a night recently by Conservation Officer Cyril Nelson at a weir placed in nearby Ocqueoc River. The lampreys move upstream to spawn.

These eel-like creatures are predators that attach themselves to fish by the suction of their mouths, sucking blood from the host. Many lake trout taken in northern Lakes Michigan and Huron show scars of lamprey attacks.

Lampreys taken from the stream have ranged from 18 to more than 24 inches in length. They were first reported in the Great Lakes in the early 1920's, having by-passed Niagara Falls by way of the Welland Canal.

NEWS FROM CAMP CHARLEVOIX

All new campers and staff members at Camp Charlevoix were initiated at the meeting Council Fire ceremony held Tuesday evening. New campers wearing blankets and blindfolds were led to the secret ring by so-called Reimann, owner and director of the camp, in full Indian dress. The procession made a full circle in the ring before they were halted and blindfolds removed. All the directors were silenced as the Great Chief entered upon his throne and called upon the spirit of the ancestors in which to protect the secret meeting. Chief Neconemaubongh, a counselor from the Upper Peninsula, and an adopted member of the L'Anse tribe of Chippewa Indians was called upon to tell the story of the Indians of Michigan. The Great Chief then called upon the Spirit of the Sky to send fire to light the council fire. Immediately from the sky a flash of fire descended into the fuel pile and as the blaze grew higher the entire assemble was exposed to the Chief. The Chief ordered the new braves from the ring, but on the plea of one of the old-braves they were allowed to remain. The new braves were then told what would be necessary for them to do to become members of the tribe of Charlevoix. Chief Walli told of the shooting requirements necessary for membership; Chief Brown explained the riding tests; Chief Armstrong and Chief Bergmann related the Ceramic and handicraft tests; Chief Maguire, athletics; Chief Worrner, sailing and canoeing; Chief Henderson, swimming; Chief Dann, nature study. All new warriors were placed on probation for the remaining seven weeks of camp. Those braves who have successfully passed their tests by the close of the camping period, will be brought into membership of the tribe at Charlevoix.

Baseball during the week found Angell's No. 2 Green team undefeated in two games played and tied with Nyquist's No. 4 Gray team who also remain undefeated. On Thursday Angell's team defeated Noel's team 20-3. Angell pitched and Roberts caught for the winners. Cornelius pitched and Noel caught for the losers. Snyder's No. 8 Grey team was defeated by Nyquist's team Thursday afternoon 20-8. Dresser pitched for the winners and Bachman caught. Green and Fairbanks tossed for the losers and Holds caught. WACs Pull KP—

Sgt. Merle Blanchard, WAC, writes from "somewhere in England": "A rainy Sunday afternoon and I just came back from chow, so shall settle down and catch up on my letter writing. Quite a few others have the same idea. There are several here from Michigan, and occasionally we make it seem like home.

"I'm pretty well onto my job, and like it fine. The fellows treat us grand, and we get along okay with the English Service girls. Most of the civilians call us "the Lady Yanks", pronouncing it with a very broad "a."

"Everything is rationed, and if it isn't, the price is sky-high. The food is excellent, and we share a mess hall with the fellows. I guess some of us will pull KP there tomorrow, and we're really getting razzed. It won't be hard, but the GIs sure enjoy the idea of seeing a WAC on KP.

He had an occasion to speak to one of the soldiers in this unit the other day and it developed that the lad was from Beaver Island. He knew Mrs. Lamphrar Freeburn's family and Mrs. Freeburn well. Lt. Freeburn did not give the boy's name but the two were delighted to have found someone from the same corner of the world — so far away from that corner. Lt. THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Judge, I've had a lot of calls for that book you took out last week... 'Tell the Boys Back Home'. How did you like it?"

"Fine, Sarah, fine... it's just the kind of book I like to get hold of... I enjoyed every word of it. Wish I could have been along with the author myself... actually living with the men right on the fighting fronts. He got mighty close to them and they certainly opened up their minds and their hearts to him."

"There were lots of new things in the book I hadn't seen in any other reports from front-line writers. But there was one question the men asked the author that I have seen time and time again in these stories. That was 'Are you going to put prohibition over on us soldiers again... and without getting our vote?'"

"I noticed that, too, Judge, and I think the least we can do for those fighting men who are doing so much for us is to respect their wishes on that subject."

CALLING FOLKS WHO ARE WAITING FOR TELEPHONES

YES, even the rugged jeep is "wired for sound." Not all, but a good many of them are equipped with 2-way radio-telephone apparatus.

In fact, there is scarcely a vehicle used by our armed forces that doesn't require some form of telephone equipment. Warships, merchant ships, submarines, tanks, planes, landing barges, reconnaissance cars — just to mention a few — place a staggering load on telephone manufacturing facilities. As a result, many requests for telephone service cannot be met without long delays. There is a large and growing waiting list.

Orders are filled promptly for telephones essential to the war or necessary to public health, welfare or security. Other orders can be filled only as present users give up service. A uniform and fair procedure,* approved by the Michigan Public Service Commission, applies to the handling of all orders.

No one will be more pleased than we when conditions again permit us to meet every request for service, whenever and wherever wanted.

*Upon request, we shall be glad to mail you a folder which answers questions about wartime telephone restrictions and tells how the procedure applies in different cases.

No Treasury money was available, so E. J. Madill, personnel director, financed the project himself and the employees furnished the records. POLICE CHIEFS MEET AT BELVEDERE HOTEL

Careful attention is administered to prisoners of war over here so that the Germans will have no excuse to abuse the 20,000 American men held capitive in Germany. Regular employment is a substantial part of our prison-camp program; the prisoners work either at various army posts or under contract to private employers. Six million dollars profit has already gone into the coffers of the U. S. Treasury as a result of their working for private employers, because while private enterprise must pay wage rates established by law, the maximum remuneration prisoners may receive is 80c per day for time work and $1.20 per day for piece work.

Few would believe that of all the sabotage committed in this country since January 1, 1940, not one single act has been traceable to foreign sponsorship or foreign inspiration. This fact was one of the highlights in another address to the Police Chiefs' conference, entitled "Law Enforcement Looks Ahead," delivered by R. A. Guerin, Special Agent in Charge, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Detroit. Mr. Guerin also stated that only 10 per cent of the 16,000 cases of reported sabotage in the past four years were found to be actually sabotage.

The fear that the return of millions of G.I.s as trained killers will affect post-war crime is entirely unfounded, continued Mr. Guerin. Only the men who were confirmed criminals when they went into service will return better fit to kill, while even those who had criminal tendencies when they joined the army will be cured, if they are changed by front-line fighting at all.

Flourishing research has been instrumental in the increased use of scientific methods in crime detection, and Mr. Guerin illustrated his statement by saying that today a pinpoint of paint taken off a car is sufficient to reveal both its make and model.

Interviewed after his talk, Mr. Guerin commented most favorably on the conference, saying, "A lot of good things are coming out of it." Since he's been in Charlevoix, he's just slept, eaten, and attended meetings, but nevertheless, he thinks it is a most enjoyable spot and is anxious to make a return visit.

"War Time Rackets" was the title of a talk by Harry Shearer of the Detroit Board of Commerce in which the conferees were warned of the various rackets which have sprouted under a patriotic guise since the outbreak of the war. He mentioned especially numerous publications which make a first impression of being sponsored by the army or navy, but are in reality the invention of some shrewd racketeer.

Chief Joseph Kluchesky of the Milwaukee, Wis., Police Department, told the conference how Milwaukee is making use of more than one thousand volunteer civilian police. Not only are these men indispensable to the force in case of any crises, but they have been given the credit for Milwaukee's recent record in clearing 85 per cent of over 900 reported burglaries last year, the highest record in 25 years.

The remaining agenda of the confrence included addresses by Colonel S. D. Ringsdorf, Commanding Hdqrs. No. 1, Sixth Service Command, Detroit, and the Honorable Edward Jeffries Jr., Mayor of Detroit.

PUBLIC HEALTH NEWS

"Two smallpox cases have been reported in widely separated counties. Because of large percentage of unvaccinated persons, urge immediate, intensive campaign for vaccination." Dr. William DeKleine, state commissioner of health, telegraphed this message to every health officer in Michigan following the recent discovery of a case of smallpox in Macomb County of another in Clare. Neither one of these persons had ever been successfully vaccinated.

The source of infection is not known for either case. Dr. DeKleine stated that it was possible that the disease had been spread by someone who had a light, unrecognized case of smallpox. Such cases particularly in adults are often mistaken for chickenpox, he said.

Because it is probable that many other persons were exposed besides the two already ill, Dr. DeKleine urged that very person who has not been successfully vaccinated in the past five years see his family doctor or health officer at once.

The Michigan Department of Health is rushig special orders of smallpox vaccine for use in these two counties and in adjoining counties. This vaccine produced in the health department laboratories, is free for use by any physician. Health authorities advocate vaccination before the child reaches one year of age.

Early in June Dr. DeKleine warned that a smallpox epidemic was likely to occur in Michigan because a large percentage of the population had never been vaccinated. In the department's monthly publication "Michigan Public Health," he stated: "The real danger inherent in the present low incidence of smallpox is now a thing of the past and consequently that vaccination is no longer necessary. If this state of mind is allowed to develop generally it may be confidently predicted that within a short time the growing number of unprotected persons will provide a fertile field for the recurrence of smallpox in epidemic form."

Poultry Short Course July 17-21

A special school for poultry-men has been arranged at Michigan State College for the period July 17-21. The school will teach selection and pullorum testing in addition to other topics of interest.

The number of persons knowing how of selecting birds by external characteristics is very limited with the vast majority that are untrained. As the number of persons increase that know this art, improvement will be made in our poultry. Improved poultry and poultry keeping increases the value of our industry and in addition, the income to our farms.

The cost of the course is very small, in fact $2.00 is the amount for registration fees. All poultrymen who find it possible will benefit greatly by spending this week at Michigan State College. For farther information relative to this poultry school, contact your County Agent.

PICKLE NEWS
By H. E. Brumm, Dist. Mgr.
H. J. Heinz Company
Charlevoix, Mich.

Striped beetles may appear in a cucumber field as soon as the seedlings break through the soil, and may seriously damage or completely destroy the small plants in a very short time. Therefore, every grower should have a supply of insecticide dust on hand at planting time and make the first application just as soon as the seedlings come up whether beetles are present or not, and repeat as often as may be necessary. The following mixture is recommended when shaker cans or loose woven bags are used in applying dust, and when plants are dry:

1 lb. Calcium Arsenate.
19 lbs. Finely Ground Gypsum.

When a dust gun is available, Rotenone dust (3/4 to 1 per cent Rotenone) is quite satisfactory for killing beetles provided the dust comes in contact with them. Rotenone is slow acting requiring 12 to 24 hours to kill insects, and is harmless to all warmblooded animals.

Why a Farmer Should Buy and Keep War Bonds

by O. G. Lloyd
Head, Dept. of Agricultural Economics
Purdue University

For more than 16 months farmers have enjoyed the most favorable exchange of farm dollars for Bond dollars in more than a quarter of a century. Based upon 1935-39 as 100, farmers have sold farm products at the average ratio of $140 for every $100 paid, including interest and taxes. This ratio compares most favorably with the decade 1920-29 with a ratio of 105 and especially with the decade 1930-39 when the ratio fell to 89 or an $11 loss compared to the base period of 100 in 1935-39.

Granting that the post war period price level will not fall lower than the level of 1935-39 for a long period of time, the advantage of exchanging war inflated farm dollars for War Bond dollars is obvious. Ordinary business transactions are made on a margin of less than 10 percent compared to this extraordinary exchange of 40 percent.

To obtain the 40 percent advantage of inflationary farm dollars, it is necessary to keep the War Bonds until prices are deflated to the 1935-39 level. In the meantime the interest paid on the investment will increase the value of the bond 33⅓ percent or a War Bond costing $75 will be redeemed by the Government at $100.

During periods of stationary and of falling prices of farm products, which are probable during the next decade, farming will have urgent demands for liquid capital which can be readily turned into cash for equipment and improvements. Such expenditures wisely made pay big dividends through more economical production which meets current demand. At such periods the wise farmer is not handicapped for operating capital if he owns War Bonds. Backed by the credit of the Government, War Bonds are so secure and so readily convertible into purchasing power that they excel the land itself as a means of providing ready cash.

The discipline of following a budget which requires savings for investment provides prudent spending of time and money. When the amount for spending is reduced in order to invest for private and public benefit, an increased satisfaction is gained by a new evaluation of current needs in terms of making the investment goals possible. It is little wonder then that such War Bond purchasers marvel that current needs are met about as fully as before and the Bond seems to be more of a gift than of a sacrifice of present wants. Savings for buying War Bonds are obtained, therefore, with the least friction of daily living when accompanied by judicious spending.

Farming is an occupation which offers an excellent example of the American principle of free enterprise. Farmers should buy War Bonds and keep them because their industry and efficiency have given them the highest production per man of farmers in any country. Without high production per man, there cannot be much to spend on current needs, much to save for purchase of War Bonds and much to give to any worthy cause. Now that high purchasing power of farm products is accompanied by high physical production of farm products per man, the income of farmers has been increased correspondingly and farmers are able and willing to buy War Bonds. Such purchases are not only a smart investment for high economic and patriotic returns, but farmers can avail themselves of the opportunity today because they do have the money to make the purchase of the War Bonds and should keep them in order to obtain the highest returns on the investment.

"Out on the rough Atlantic . . . or away on the vast Pacific . . . or down on the blue waters of the Gulf . . . the Navy ships run into some pretty rough weather. And it's not an unusual thing for both officers and men to stop by a large tin can that's brought out of the galley at the sign of very bad weather. What's in it? It's full of . . . yes . . . pickles . . . pickles for the sailors to keep them from getting seasick. Ask any seasoned sailor and he'll tell you it's a true story."
Excerpt from Navy's radio salute to H. J. Heinz Company

YES, the boys on the world's fighting fronts—on land and at sea—are asking for Pickles.

They can't be "passed" unless the folks back home make them available.

Our growers need pickers and we must have help at our stations and factories to meet an emergency demand for Heinz Pickles.

The farmers of this district are making every effort to supply us with cucumbers, but their crops must be picked, received and processed to make Pickles available to the fighting men.

The season is short—August and half of September—and Pickles must be handled promptly to avoid spoilage.

Free Maternity and Infant Care

Service men's wives eligible for emergency maternity care are urged to apply at the beginning of pregnancy so that their health and that of the child can be better safeguarded, Katherine F. Lenroot, Chief of the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, says. Medical, nursing and hospital care for the service man's wife are provided during pregnancy, childbirth, and for six months after child-birth and for the infant throughout its first year, all without cost to the service man, or his family. Application blanks for this care may be obtained from a physician, the local Red Cross or local Health Department.

Some Prices Up, Some Down

Cabbage, dry onions and sweet cherries for table use will be up slightly, in retail price, while pickles and all melons except watermelons will be somewhat lower at retail as a result of recent Office of Price Administration actions.

Save Travel by Cancelling Meets

To release transportation facilities for essential war needs, 70 organizations — business, labor, religious, social, etc., — have cancelled their respective conventions, and 30 organizations have drastically cut down attendance at their conventions, the Office of Defense Transportation announces.

Fertilizer Restrictions Eased

Farmers may fertilize their general crops with as many pounds of fertilizer as recommended by the "Appropriate State Experiment Station" or at the rate customarily used in the area. Whichever is greater, the War Food Administration says. WFA has eliminated restrictions on acquisition and use of organic nitrogenous fertilizer materials such as tankage, fish scrap, lonemeal, processed manure, peat and humus. Restrictions remain on edible oil-seed meals.

For Vets—16,000 Hospital Beds

Sixteen thousand additional veterans' hospital beds in buildings to be constructed in 20 states have been recommended by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Under this largest building program ever requested by the Veterans' Administration, the new beds would be located in hospitals in New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Delaware, Virginia, Florida, Michigan, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi or Alabama, Kansas or Missouri, Montana or North Dakota, Colorado, California, Texas, Washington, New York, Georgia, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Illinois. Addition of these beds would bring the total of 121,000 available to veterans.

Three Out of Four Will Can

Three out of four women expect to can fruit and vegetables at home this season, according to a nation-wide survey reported by the Office of War Information. Canned peas, tomatoes and asparagus were restored to rationing by OPA after supplies on hand had sold rapidly, making room for the new pack. Civilian supplies of peas, tomatoes, and asparagus are expected to be 20 per cent smaller during the current pack year than during the pack year ended July 1. To help pack the current fruit and vegetable crop, 700,000 full-time or 1,400,000 part-time workers must be recruited, the War Manpower Commission says. Because of the dependency of overseas service men on canned fruits and vegetables it is imperative that these foods be made available to them.

Swap Help Across Border

Farmers are used to swapping help, but this summer two countries, the United States and Canada, will swap grain harvest help back and forth across the border, the U. S. Department of Agriculture announces. With border crossing formalities suspended, Canadian threshing outfits will help harvest the western grent plains crops until September 15, and American machines and crews later will reciprocate in the Canadian prairie provinces until December 15.

Round-Up

Under new OPA instructions, the amount and type of gasoline rations issued to individuals after June 30 are now available to the public or newspapers upon inquiry to local Rationing Boards . . . OPA has removed new inner tubes from rationing, thus helping conserve tires, inasmuch as good tubes properly inflated prolong tire life . . . Producers, carriers and handlers of farm products have been authorized and urged to form committees to assist Office of Defense Transportation District Managers in putting to full use all motor-trucks available for transporting farm products, ODT says.

This week the booth was under the management of the American Legion with sales of stamps and bonds reaching $9,047.60. Linda and Eileen put on a sketch in which Linda was the announcer and Eileen was supposedly a violin-soloist. The audience received quite a shock, however, when the violinist was forced to stop playing because of a sneezing and coughing fit and the melody continued right along, though now revealing itself as coming from the sidelines where it was really being played during the entire sketch.

Other special features of the Youth Camp are the Goose Club which selects a king or queen of the day among those who lose articles about the camp grounds and forces him or her to wear a tin can crown, serenades by the boys (!) on Thursday nights, and a pretty camp nurse, Jane Ellen Vance of East Jordan, who was thought to be the indirect cause of the unusual number of ailments acquired by the campers during the week.

Iranian money, at least, is printed in Philadelphia. Hamadan, where Jay was stationed most of the time, is on the famous American-British supply route to Russia, winding from Khurramshahr on the Persian Gulf to Tiberiz on the Russian border. "The boys here," Jay declares, "are doing the most wonderful job imaginable." Here are found most usual climatic conditions. In the north tortuous mountain passes, peaks in the eternal snows, sub-zero weather, and to the south the great Persian desert with a below sea-level depth exceeding that of our own Death Valley — a place where, at Andmeshk, an American meteorologist recorded a searing temperature of 180 degrees F. This sand plain is completely devoid of vegetation, and life is limited to scorpions and huge poisonous lizards of the type of our own Gila monsters. Over an American-British built road across this barren country moves the vast war material that has been and is so vital to the outstanding Russian military achievements.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Allard and their nephew, Jimmy Rapp, of Grand Rapids, and Mrs. Allard's sister, Mrs. Joseph Kellogg and niece, Barbara, of Milwaukee, Wis., arrived Sunday to spend a week with the former's mother, Mrs. Thomas Bacot, and other relatives.

Sundial Time

The distance from sunrise to noon and from noon to sunset is exactly the same according to sundial time. The discrepancy in the lengths of the mornings and afternoons is due not to the sun but to the fact that our clocks are not keeping sundial time but time according to the average performance of the sun. Noon by a watch seldom coincides with noon by sundial. If time were computed by sundial exclusively, mornings and afternoons would be equal in length each day although they would differ from day to day.

CAN VETERANS GO BACK TO FARMS?

Farming will very likely be less profitable within the few years following the end of the war. At the present, farm prices and land prices are high, but they cannot be expected to continue at their present levels. Because of this, the problem of returning veterans who wish to take up farming is a serious one.

It is expected that a rather large proportion of demobilized servicemen will be interested in agriculture. New experiences, travel, different backgrounds and other factors too numerous to mention can account for this, but much of it will be based on limited experiences and little information.

Agriculture has changed. It has become mechanized. It has become highly technical. Only men with a background of practical farm experience and a full knowledge of the limitations in this field should be directed to farming. Agriculture should assume its share of rehabilitation problems of returned soldiers, sailors and marines. It can provide opportunity for many of them. But it cannot be expected to absorb all of the individuals who will have developed a new and hastily formed interest in this field.

In northern Michigan, much of the land is non-agricultural. The purchase price per acre is therefore attractively low to the uninformed would-be purchaser. Prospective farmer-veterans should be guided away from such land which is unsuited for agriculture. This is a patriotic service which should be offered our returning servicemen.

There is opportunity in farming if it is carefully organized, to be carried on with industrial employ-

PRIVATE DIVES TO RESCUE GIRL AND BOTH ARE LOST

SOLDIER ON FURLOUGH AND COUSIN MEET DEATH IN SPORTSMEN'S PARK AT THE MOUTH OF RIVER.

Two lives were lost by drowning in East Jordan late Friday afternoon when Pfr. Harold Bates, 21, on furlough from Camp Maxie, Tex., drowned in a vain attempt to save the life of his cousin, Joyce Palmeteer, 15, of Luther.

Pfc. Bates and Miss Palmeteer accompanied by the former's wife, were crossing a rustic bridge in Sportsmen's Park at the mouth of the Jordan River when Miss Palmeteer fell through a hole in the bridge into ten feet of water. Bates, an expert swimmer, was stunned by the impact against the water when he dove in for her and handicapped by the girl's struggles, was pulled under the water. His wife had witnessed the accident but the pair were in the water about a half hour before help arrived and resuscitation attempts failed. Dr. F. F. McMillan pronounced the drowning accidental at the inquest held Saturday morning.

Pfc. Bates was born in Luther on June 15, 1923, and came with his family to East Jordan in June, 1940.

Surviving are his wife, the former Joyce Sommerville whom he married in September, 1941; his

NOTED MISSIONARIES WILL LEAD CO-OP MISSION FEST

Rev. E. W. Koeppe and Miss Wilhemina Kaalsbeek, missionaries who have done extensive work in the Orient, will be the guest speakers at the Co-operative Mission Fest at Eastport next Thursday, July 27th, to be given jointly by the Barnard and the Atwood Reformed churches and the Atwood and the Ellsworth Christian Reformed Churches.

A veteran Reformed Missionary to China, Rev. Koeppe served three terms in the Amoy Mission there when he was taken a Japanese prisoner and held for many months. He was finally repatriated by our Government and returned to the country on the first trip of the Gripsholm, the Swedish Repatriation Ship. Miss Kaalsbeek, who served ably as one of the Christian Reformed Missionaries in Shanghai, China, was also interned by the Japanese Government for a good while and was at last released to return to the States on the second trip made by the Gripsholm.

Both speakers will talk at 1:00 p. m. when the program begins and at 8:00 in the evening, Rev. Koeppe for the Reformed denomination and Miss Kaalsbeek for the Christian Reformed denomination. The evening meeting will take place in the Atwood Reformed Church. Representatives of the four churches, who comprise the Mission Fest Committee, have been working for many months to make next week's Mission Fest as successful as the one held last year. "Special Music" will be played at each program, and Mrs. Koeppe will conduct the Children's Hour during the afternoon program. Everyone is cordially invited to attend both the afternoon and evening services.

Pearl Gives Spot Account of Attack on Pearl Harbor

By Lois Schaeffer

"All hands worked together as though it were the last day on earth for everyone," exclaimed Bob Pearl, Yeoman 1c, describing the reactions of men on his ship to the attack on Pearl Harbor. Two waves of planes came over the harbor, he continued, and when the first wave began bombing our warships we couldn't believe we were being attacked; most of the boys seemed to think that it was an accident committed by our own planes on maneuvers.

At the same time two-man submarines had come into the harbor were spotted and we went into action, keeping them from doing the damage they were supposed to do.

When the boys saw what was happening they were plenty mad and didn't find time to be afraid until several days later. Bob admitted that one of his first thoughts was regretting that he had spent several dollars to have his watch fixed a couple of days before the attack. He tells the story about one old navy man who had his entire life savings, some $20,000, down below in the locker room of a battleship that was sinking rapidly. Frantically he thrust the key to his locker at some young fellow on board and told him that if he could save his money he would split it with him. The young sailor went down below and returned a short while later, handing $10,000 to the old man and tucking $10,000 into his own money belt. It was probably the quickest big money the young sailor will ever make, but the question remains as to whether it would have done him any good in Davey Jones' locker.

Just as a captain will never desert his ship, a galley-cook must be attached to his galley, for on Bob's ship the cook, who was on topside, safe and sound, rushed back down to the galley to turn

Pickers Save Crop

Twelve hundred cherry-pickers were busy on Monday of this week harvesting the cherry crop in in this district, almost none of which will go to waste this year because of the splendid response of pickers, both in and outside of the county. That same day there were four hundred pickers in Parters' Orchard alone, and while some orchard's could use more pickers, there is no critical shortage.

Six school buses are running fully loaded from East Jordan and Boyne City, and Charlevoix is willing to lend a bus if it is needed. In addition to these means of transportation, many local cars filled with pickers are driving out to orchards daily.

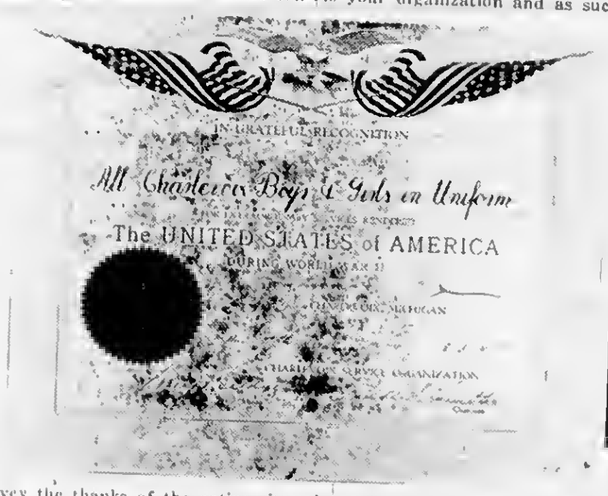
GOLD-SEALED SERVICE AWARDS ARE GIVEN TO CHARLEVOIX SERVICEMEN

Over 515 gold-sealed service awards are being sent, beginning this week, to all local men and women who are fighting now or have previously served in the armed forces of World War II. Because there is so little opportunity for Charlevoix's citizens to express their heartfelt appreciation to their own youth who are sacrificing much to insure the survival of all communities such as Charlevoix in a free United States, the Service Award was conceived as a symbol which would convey the thanks of the entire city. Each award is handprinted with the name of its respective owner, signed by the City Mayor and Charlevoix Service Organization Chairman, sealed with the City Seal in gold, and may be easily framed.



In contrast to the crumpled discharge paper which was the only certified testimonial to the service of men and women in World War I, the Charlevoix Service Award was devised as a permanent record of its recipients' participation in the present world conflict. Conceived more than a year ago, the awards are just being mailed because of the personal attention each one required; they will be sent to the families of their real owners for safekeeping, while every service man and service woman will receive a letter informing him or her that the award has been made.

It is desired to thank Father Aloysius Ulanowicz publicly for handprinting each Certificate, and Frances Martin for the work involved in addressing and mailing. After this date awards will be mailed in groups of ten.

It is also desired to thank Mrs. George Bergmann, Miss Anne Higman, and Juanita Cherney for their splendid cooperation in addressing and mailing these Certificates of Recognition.

Above all, remember that the Charlevoix Service Organization is your organization and as such deserves your support so that it may continue to mail Hospitalization Boxes to every convalescing service man, to send out the Charlevoix Courier to all who desire it, to furnish transportation to those selectees who cannot reach their homes after returning from pre-induction exams, and carry on its many other vital activities. Contribute now to this organization by depositing your donation at the Charlevoix County State Bank in the name of the Charlevoix Service Organization. Serving on the C.S.O. Committee are:

Ralph S. Hamilton, Chairman.
Stewart Coleman.
Fr. Aloysius Ulanowicz.
E. J. Edwards.
Mrs. Charles Bellinger.
Mrs. F. R. Ross.
Mrs. Harry Walstad.

The Charlevoix Service Award may be seen on display at Don Campbell's Boot Shop.

Our Boys Take Part In Election That Most Men In Service Missed Out On

Charlevoix has the distinction of being the only community in the state reporting overseas servicemen's ballots cast in election primaries held last week. From England, Scotland, Australia and nineteen of our own states came a number of the votes that helped select candidates for the November election.

This unusual showing was due in a great measure to the foresightedness of City Clerk Fenton Bulow and Deputy City Clerk, Bob Emrey. The absentee ballot which Congress finally decided upon for the entire nation provides for the regular election in the fall only, and not for the primaries. In Charlevoix County, however, special effort was made to have the ballots printed early enough for Mr. Emrey to mail them to all servicemen and have them returned, thus enabling Charlevoix boys to participate in an election which, because of the war, they would otherwise have missed.

On August 1st, the city will start mailing ballots to men in the fighting forces for the Presidential election. Mr. Emrey reports that 118 applications for absentee ballots for the big election have already been received and that twice that number are expected before the deadline. According to these figures practically all eligible Charlevoix residents will be voting next fall, and the fact that many will not be walking up to the polls in person will make no difference in the exertion of this great democratic privilege.

DROST BROTHERS AND ALEX FARMER MEET IN IRELAND

SONS OF CHRIST DROST STAY TOGETHER IN 34 MONTHS OF ARMY LIFE

Next best to letters from home is the Courier, writes Pfc. Willard B. Drost, son of Christ Drost, of 103 Mason Street, from northern Ireland. Pfc. Drost, who enlisted on his eighteenth birthday on September 11, 1941, and his brother, Pfc. Cecil Drost, who enlisted with him, have been together in their 34 months of army life.

They received their training at Camp Grant, Ill., and were stationed there at the time the United States went to war. Later they were transferred to Fort Custer, Mich., and left from there for overseas duty in April, 1942. After being stationed in Iceland for more than a year and a half, they were sent to Scotland in August of last year, and after a few months there and in England they were transferred to northern Ireland where they are now stationed with the medical department.

Recently Pfc. Cecil saw someone he thought he recognized when sitting in a park in Belfast, Ireland. He followed the fellow down the street and as it happened it was someone he did know — T5 Alex Farmer. It was a happy reunion, for Alex was the first person from "home" Cecil had seen since leaving the States.

Both Cecil and Willard are entitled to a furlough soon but hope to stay until the job is completed. Both are buglers and play in the band. Willard plays the chapel organ. They have one brother, Louis, who is stationed in Alabama with the army.

Boss Shoots To Kill

Private Gerald Boss, trainee of "D" Company, 174th Infantry Replacement Training Battalion, Camp Hood, Texas, qualified as Marksman with the Army's M-1 Rifle, according to Lieutenant Colonel Earl W. Huntting, Battalion Commander. The course consisted of firing at 200, 300 and 500 yards in both slow, and sustained fire.

Private Boss who is the husband of Mrs. Beatrice Boss of 1308 Bridge St., Charlevoix, Michigan is now in his eighth week of basic training. He has already fired familiarization courses with the 50 Caliber Machine Gun, 30 Caliber Carbine, Landscape Firing, Towed Target Firing, Aerial Target Firing and Transition Firing. Later in his training he will undergo a course in Field Target Firing.

MICHIGAN OUT-OF-DOORS

Playground News of Field and Stream

Rare Cranes Increasing

LANSING — Rare sandhill cranes may be increasing in numbers in Michigan according to conservation department game men. Observers report that larger numbers of birds have been seen in recent weeks in the Seney marsh, Schoolcraft County, than have appeared there in earlier seasons. Upwards of 75 of the cranes in one flock were counted last fall.

The Seney marsh is the favored nesting place of the sandhill crane in Michigan, although department records show the crane nests on the Waterloo recreation area in Jackson County, the state Audubon Society's refuge in Calhoun County, Chandler's marsh near Lansing, and the Corey marsh in Clinton County.

Dog Trials

LANSING — August 15th is the earliest date that dog owners in Lower Michigan can begin to train dogs on game birds or animals, the conservation department wishes to emphasize. Earliest date in the upper peninsula is August 1st. Such training may be continued through March 15th.

A larger-than-ordinary number of requests for special permits to train dogs in advance of the legally-fixed opening dates has been received by the department recently and all have been refused. The statute fixes dates 60 days in advance of the opening of hunting seasons and provides that game birds and animals shall not be molested by dog training operations during nesting and rearing seasons.

The conservation director is empowered this year to authorize the holding of field trials and chases between April 15th and August 15th, a period previously closed to such events.

Pelicans on Isle Royale

LANSING — Six pelicans have been seen recently at Washington Harbor on Isle Royale in Lake Superior according to Arthur S. Sivertson, an Isle Royale fisherman who visited the conservation department last week. They were the first pelicans seen there in 40 years, according to Sivertson's father.

The pelicans were almost as large as swans, with wingspread of about eight feet, snowy white except for black-tipped wings, and with orange-colored bills. They were extremely shy, although photographs were obtained at fairly close range.

White pelicans, of the species seen on Isle Royale, are birds of Mississippi valley lakes and lakes in the Great Plains region. Michigan is on the extreme eastern edge of their known range and there are no records of their nesting in this state. They nest abundantly in Manitoba and other parts of British North America.

First commercial pig iron to be produced in Michigan was smelted in a blast furnace at Union City, Branch County, in May, 1847, from bog iron ore obtained in Union, Girard, and Butler townships, Branch County.

Do's and Dont's For Fishermen

LANSING — Here are seven Do's and Dont's recommended by the conservation department to help fishermen keep out of trouble:

1. Protect your head with a wide brim hat and wear clothing adequate for protection from wind and insect bites.

2. Carrying a vacuum bottle or flask of good drinking water that has not been boiled is dangerous.

3. Be cautious while in a boat, especially when wearing rubber boots or other clothing that will hamper you in swimming.

4. When bait-casting from a boat, use the overhand cast so you will not endanger your companions.

5. Carry a first-aid kit and promptly sterilize scratches and punctures from hooks and fish fins, which often cause infection.

6. Should a fishhook become buried in the flesh, don't try to pull it out. Push it on around and out through the skin. Cut off the barb with the wire cutter or pair of pliers which should always be in your kit; then the hook may be extracted easily.

7. Don't venture out on the water in stormy weather. When the weather is threatening, head for shore.

Commercial Fishermen Weathering Rough Seas

LANSING — Commercial fishermen in Michigan waters of the Great Lakes are weathering the rough seas of wartime labor shortages, scarcity and increased cost of equipment.

Resident commercial fishing licenses issued by the conservation department for the year beginning July 1st are approaching the 1,000-mark, a figure that is average for the first weeks of the new license year.

License fees are based on overall length and registered gross tonnage of fishing boats.

Bluegill Limit

LANSING — Michigan law says that 15 bluegills are the possession limit for any one person at any one time. The law makes no exception in the case of a person who rents a quick-freeze food storage locker.

It is possible that the legislature may someday consider the widening use of such food storage facilities and allow reasonable increases in possession limits fixed by statute for Michigan game fishes.

Meanwhile, the Michigan conservation department is busily saying "Sorry" to locker renters who want to save more than a taste of fresh fish for out-of-season days to come.

Limit of 300 hunters has been placed on Allegan County's special antlerless deer season, next December 1 to 10, inclusive.

A method which has been found effective in some instances in preventing development of ivy and sumac poisoning is to rub the skin with alcohol as soon as possible after exposure.

The number of lakes of all sizes in Michigan as shown on the most reliable maps is 11,037.

Michigan conservation officers have rescued several fawns in recent weeks which had been picked up by well-meaning individuals. The conservation department does not issue permits to keep game animals or birds that are picked up in closed seasons.

State Makes Money on Oil and Gas Revenues

LANSING — Oil and gas revenues from state-owned lands may exceed $900,000 this year, topped only by the record total of $980,863 paid into the general fund from such sources in 1943, the conservation department announces.

State income from bonuses, rentals, and royalties in the first six months of 1944 was $443,329.

War-stimulated expansion of oil and gas activity in Michigan has lifted the state's income from this source each year since 1940. The totals: 1940 $391,631; 1941 $516,350; 1942 $877,563; 1943 $980,863.

Film Teaches How to Handle Firearms

LANSING — Right and wrong ways of handling firearms will be shown in a one-reel motion picture now being prepared by the conservation department's education division for release early in September.

The picture will be in color and will be furnished for both silent and sound projection equipment. Film strips and slides, also in preparation, will utilize other types of equipment.

Filming and distribution of the picture has been suggested by the Michigan hunting accident prevention committee appointed several months ago by P. J. Hoffmaster, director of conservation. Placing emphasis on education, rather than more legislation, as the solution for the state's hunting accident problem, the committee has recommended that the pictures be shown in schools, industrial plants, and at sportsmen's gatherings.

Large Wild Berry Crop

LANSING — Largest wild berry crop in several years is ripening on sand plains of many northern Michigan counties, and only lack of sufficient rainfall can prevent its full maturing.

Except in Alpena and Montmorency counties, where frost hit blossoms and reduced crop prospects by two-thirds, the crop in the upper half of the southern peninsula should be well above the average. Frost also hit blossoms in Mackinac County in the northern peninsula but elsewhere above the Straits an exceptional yield is indicated if there is sufficient rainfall to keep berries from drying up.

Wild blueberries and blackberries, especially the first-named, provide substantial income in a number of northern counties. First point-free bluebrries to reach northern markets last season brought 70 cents a quart. Lack of pickers is expected to limit returns this summer.

Quick-freezing of berries is expected to be an after-the-war development.

Hunting licenses issued by the Michigan department of conservation next fall will include figures on hunting accidents in recent seasons as warning to exercise all possible care in the handling of firearms.

Although no precious stones have as yet been found in Michigan, some of the minerals found in the Keeweenaw peninsula and on Isle Royale are attractive enough when cut and polished to be classed as gem minerals.

Michigan's average trout season is approximately 130 days.

RABIES IS SPREADING IN SO. MICH. CATTLE

Mad Dogs Cause Death Of 16 Cow In Recent Months.

LANSING — Mad dogs have spread rabies infection among several Michigan cattle herds, causing death of 16 cows in recent months, Dr. C. H. Clark, state veterinarian, reveals.

The cattle deaths have occurred in eight counties, which, in addition to 10 others, have been placed under rigid quarantine.

Losses from rabies-infected cows have occurred in the following counties: Washtenaw 4, Ingham 3, Clinton 3, Macomb 2, and Ionia, Jackson, Wayne, and Shiawassee, 1 each.

Dr. Clark said loss of the valuable farm animals pointed to need for greater attention by dog owners to quarantine regulations which require confinement of canine pets during the summer months.

Pass the Pickles, Mate!

"Out on the rough Atlantic . . . or away on the vast Pacific . . . or down on the blue waters of the Gulf . . . the Navy ships run into some pretty rough weather. And it's not an unusual thing for both officers and men to stop by a large tin can that's brought out of the galley at the sign of very bad weather. What's in it? It's full of . . . yes . . . pickles . . . pickles for the sailors to keep them from getting sea-sick. Ask any seasoned sailor and he'll tell you it's a true story."
Excerpt from Navy's radio salute to H. J. Heinz Company

YES, the boys on the world's fighting fronts—on land and at sea—are asking for Pickles.

They can't be "passed" unless the folks back home make them available.

Our growers need pickers and we must have help at our stations and factories to meet an emergency demand for Heinz Pickles.

The farmers of this district are making every effort to supply us with cucumbers, but their crops must be picked, received and processed to make Pickles available to the fighting men.

The season is short—August and half of September—and Pickles must be handled promptly to avoid spoilage.

Here is emergency work for men and women and boys and girls, who can work afternoons or evenings.

If you can work full-time or part-time—a few hours a day—telephone our factory, call in person, or fill in and mail the following form:

PICKLE NEWS
By H.. E. Brumm, Dist. Mgr.
H. J. Heinz Company
Charlevoix, Mich.

When vines begin to ran, they should be trained in the row. Then when picking is started, continue to train the vines so that when the crop is in the full bearing season, the vines will be confined in continuous rows about three feet wide. Avoid piling up the vines in narrow windrows which unnecessarily crowds the vines. The advantages of training vines, compared to letting them run freely, are as follows:

1. Picking is easier and quicker.
2. Picking can be done cleaner as fewer cucambors will be missed.
3. Vines are injured less in picking.
4. Rows may be spaced closer together which means increased yields per acre.
5. Open space between rows are provided for cultivation and walking daring the picking season.

By having the rows run east and west, there is less probability that the wind will roll the vines than if the rows run north and south.

TOP CROP OF PEACHES IN MICHIGAN IN 1944
One Of The Largest Crops In History Is In The Making.

Recent reports of the Michigan and Federal crop reporting services indicate Michigan this year will have one of its largest crops of fruits in history, particularly peaches and cherries.

Past records show, states Chas. Figy, Commissioner of Agriculture, abandant crops are usually associated with a quality product. The peach crop now in the making, appears to be the finest quality on record and people of our state and the central west states, if nothing unforeseen happens, should have available in about six weeks a swell supply of peaches to fill those waiting empty jars. Reports indicate that Michigan this year will be having 3¼ million bushels of peaches. This compared with 2,182,000 bushels of a 10-year average or 1,452,000 bushels a year ago.

William Geagly, state chemist, whose staff of chemists follow the fruit crops for disease analysis each year, states that the generous rain so far and the limited labor and some spray supplies on fruit farms is showing up traces of brown rot. This disease each year with some fruits takes a heavy toll. Reports thruout the state indicate that orchard owners are doing everything possible to prevent outbreaks of brown rot so as to be able to finish this quality crop of the important fruits of the state now in the making.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

Cull Poultry Flocks to Save Feed, Money

It's money in his pocket and saved feed in the bin for the Charlevoix County poultryman who culls out his non-producers this summer, says C. G. Card, head of the poultry husbandry department of Michigan State College.

Card estimates that about 10 per cent of Michigan's 12 million hens are not now producing. If these birds were sold as meat, there would be affected a saving of 4,800 tons of feed worth $360,000. In addition, there would be the income from about 3½ million pounds of poultry meat. Poultry sold for meat will likely bring a greater return by fall. Card believes.

High feed costs and reduced feed supplies can be overcome only by culling the flock so as to maintain a 50 per cent prodaction level all sammer, he asserts. Here are two tips on how to spot the lonfers:

1. The loafer is likely to be dall and money and stand with ruffled feathers. The laying hen is more alert, with bright eyes and seems to be busy.

2. The loafer's shanks may be thick, rough and deep yellow. The layer's shanks will be thin, smooth, and of fine texture.

Many 4-H club members and other farm boys are now engaged in extensive culling work over the state. This program, which includes training of the boys to become expert cullers is sponsored by the Allied Poultry Industries, Michigan Poultry Improvement Association, and the Michigan State College poultry husbandry and 4-H Club departments. Farmers interested in details of the culling program and who would like to obtain information regarding the making and ase of the Spartan poultry catching crate should consult the Charlevoix County extension office.

Nine Farmers Growing Certified Seed Potatoes

A recent announcement from the Michigan Crop Improvement Association lists the names of nine Charlevoix County farmers who have applied for inspection. This year only two varieties are being certified, the Russet Rural and Chippewa, totaling ninety-three acres. The following are the names of farmers applying for inspection:

Edwin Bradley, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 5 acres.
LeRoy Hardy, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 8 acres.
W. J. Petts, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 9 acres.
Howard Skornia, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 8 acres.
H. C. Stephens, Charlevoix, Russet Rural, 5 acres.
H. C. Stephens, Charlevoix, Chippewa, 8 acres.
Lee Sneathen, Charlevoix, Russet Rural, 22 acres.
E. P. Jensen, Walloon Lake, Russet Rural, 20 acres.
Carl Stevens, Walloon Lake, Russet Rural, 2 acres.
Elmer Hott, East Jordan, Chippewa, 6 acres.

Farmers are doing a splendid job of caring for these fields. They are spraying six or seven times with a high pressure outfit. They are treating their seed before planting. The fields are free from weeds throughout the season. All diseased plants are eliminated from the field. Thus, it is only proper that these potatoes receive a premium in price. Many local farmers would greatly benefit themselves by purchasing sufficient certified seed potatoes to establish a seed plot.

Mrs. Johanna Jensen, who was confined to her bed for a few days as the result of a fall, has recovered sufficiently to be up again.

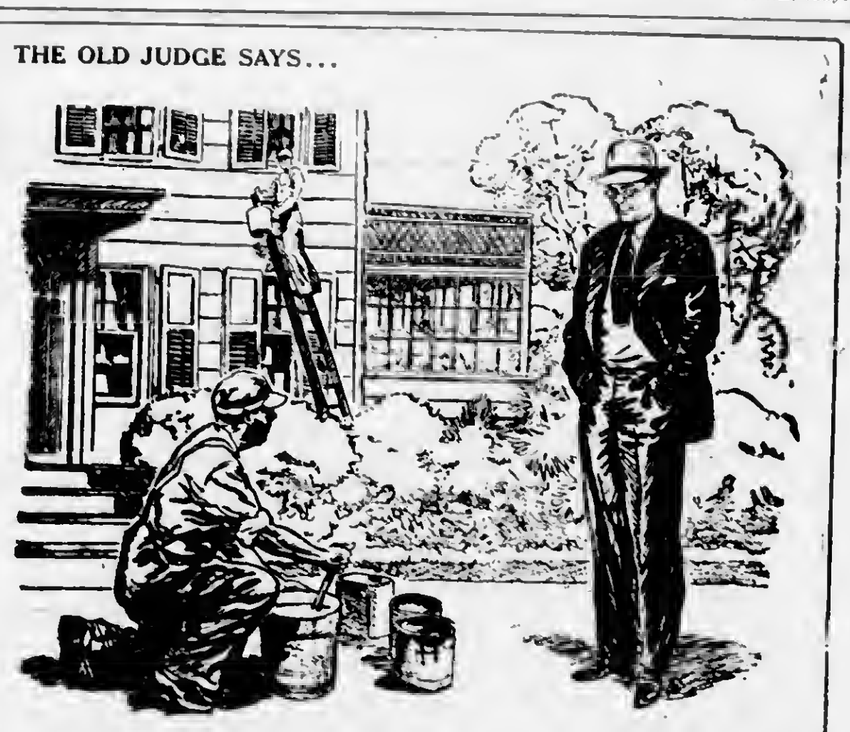
THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...



"I don't blame the fellows overseas for gettin' all het up over it, Judge. For the life of me I can't see what's all the hurry about holdin' these local prohibition elections while they're away."

"I agree with you, Steve. Time after time... in their letters, in articles, in polls taken to get the views of our fighting men... they have indicated in unmistakable terms that they don't want any action taken on prohibition, either local or national, until they get back."

"Too bad there isn't a law or somethin' to be sure their wishes are carried out, Judge."

"There is in one state I know of, Steve. Just recently it passed a law prohibiting the calling of any prohibition election until a year after the peace is declared."

"That really makes sense to me, Judge."

Typographical Mishaps

A single misplaced letter in any language can do more to enrage a subscriber and embarrass an editor than whole reams of vituperation . . .

When, on the death of President McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt succeeded to the high office, a New York editor desired to contrast the event with a recent event in Europe. But the compositor, coming to the word "oath" in the manuscript struck a wrong key and the sentence appeared: "For sheer democratic dignity, nothing could exceed the moment when, surrounded by the Cabinet, Mr. Roosevelt took his simple bath as President of the United States."

Typsetters also omit letters. A Des Moines newspaper once reported of Mr. Witter Bynner, the poet, that he had been "the pot of the evening." Mr. Bynner took it graciously.

Then there is the almost classical story about Bret Harte when he was a very young editor. He wrote the obituary notice of a most respectable lady, closing with: "above all ladies of this town, she was distinguished for her charity."

This came back from the pressroom: "distinguished for her chastity." Instead of making the correction, he merely put a mark of query on the margin of the proof, with this result: "Mrs. McGilligan, above all the ladies of this town was distinguished for her chastity (?)."

Certain words are a standing peril to typesetters. A collision between a train and a cow, reported in a newspaper, ended with the remark that the engineer "putting on full steam, dashed up against the cow and literally cut her into calves," an unfortunate impression was given when a newspaper, reporting a wedding with a double quartet of bridesmaids, said: "The bride was accompanied to the altar by tight bridesmaids." The word window has harrassed the editors of all English-speaking countries, but it was nevertheless astonishing to find "House & Garden" remarking casually: "Nothing gives a greater variety to the appearance of a house than a few undraped widows."—The Graphic Arts Monthly.

off the stoves and turn out the lights.

Bob who is 23 years old, has been in the navy for three and a half years and has been stationed at Pearl Harbor the entire time. He said that life on the island underwent complete drastic changes after the Japanese attack. A curfew was put on all civilians ruling them off the streets after 10 o'clock at night, and strict blackout was enforced from sunset to sunrise. Before the war 75 per cent of the Hawaii population was Japnnese, and many of the pilots of the planes had been at the university of Honolulu that same year.

According to Bob, American servicemen are highly respected in all Allied ports. He likes the navy and was looking for adventure when he enlisted. Now he says, "I've had all the adventure I want." When he reports back for duty it won't matter whether it's the Atlantic or Pacific because he believes that it doesn't matter where one is sent or what one does until it is all over.

ment or with some other business or profession. There will be rebuilding of farm installations and modern home conveniences in good rural communities. There will be opportunities for those who can skillfully supply those needs.

Farming should be restricted to men who have a real aptitude and interest in agriculture and to those places which are suitable to agricultural production. It must not be of such magnitude as to have any great effect on the volume of agricultural products in the nation.

The above article is condensed from a report of the Agricultural Committee of the Michigan Planning Commission.

FOCHTMAN IS AT AAF REDISTRIBUTION STATION

WO (jg) Robert C. Fochtman of Charlevoix, returned from service outside the continental United States, is now being processed through the Army Air Forces Redistribution Station No. 2 in Miami Beach, where his next assignment will be determined.

This is one of the Redistribution Stations within the AAF Personnel Distribution Command. At an AAF Redistribution Station, AAF returnees from theatres of operation are examined by specially selected medical and classification officers whose joint findings are used in recommending new assignments. Theme of the AAF Redistribution program is designation of each man to duty for which he is best fitted. Returnees live at a Redistribution Station under conditions that encourage natural response to processing, the greater part of their two week stay being devoted to rest and recreation.

AAF personnel, enlisted men and officers, are assigned to a Redistribution Station upon their return to the United States, but do not report to the station until completing a furlough or leave of three weeks. Warrant Officer Fochtman, 27, served as squadron engineer-inspector and technical supply officer during 28 months in the Asiatic-Pacific. He is the son of Angus L. Fochtman of Charlevoix and entered service October 10, 1939.

The above communication was sent to the Charlevoix Courier by the Public Relations Office of the Army Air Forces Redistribution Station No. 2 Miami Beach, Florida.

ATTENTION! ALL HOME CANNERS!

Before you begin your 1944 canning, Good Housekeeping Magazine advises you use the boiling water bath method for tomatoes and fruits, only. Can all vegetables except tomatoes by the correct use of a pressure cooker to be sure of killing botulinus germs. In the last few years, cases of botulinus food poisoning have cropped up in widely different parts of the country. Buy, borrow, share a pressure cooker -- but don't can low acid vegetables any other way. If you want further information, write Good Housekeeping Magazine, 959 Eighth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

PICKLE NEWS
By H.. E. Brumm, Dist. Mgr.
H. J. Heinz Company
Charlevoix, Mich.

When vines begin to run, they should be trained in the row. Then when picking is started, continue to train the vines so that when the crop is in the full bearing season, the vines will be confined in continuous rows about three feet wide. Avoid piling up the vines in narrow windrows which unnecessarily crowds the vines. The advantages of training vines, compared to letting them run freely, are as follows:

1. Picking is easier and quicker.
2. Picking can be done cleaner as fewer cucumbers will be missed.
3. Vines are injured less in picking.
4. Rows may be spaced closer together which means increased yields per acre.
5. Open space between rows are provided for cultivation and walking during the picking season.

By having the rows run east and west, there is less probability that the wind will roll the vines than if the rows run north and south.

TOP CROP OF PEACHES IN MICHIGAN IN 1944
One Of The Largest Crops In History Is In The Making.

Recent reports of the Michigan and Federal crop reporting services indicate Michigan this year will have one of its largest crops of fruits in history, particularly peaches and cherries.

Past records show, states Chas. Figy, Commissioner of Agriculture, abundant crops are usually associated with a quality product. The peach crop now in the making, appears to be the finest quality on record and people of our state and the central west states, if nothing unforeseen happens, should have available in about six weeks a swell supply of peaches to fill those waiting empty jars. Reports indicate that Michigan this year will be having 3½ million bushels of peaches. This compared with 2,182,000 bushels of a 10-year average or 1,452,000 bushels a year ago.

William Geagly, state chemist, whose staff of chemists follow the fruit crops for disease analysis each year, states that the generous rain so far and the limited labor and some spray supplies on fruit farms is showing up traces of brown rot. This disease each year with some fruits takes a heavy toll. Reports thruout the state indicate that orchard owners are doing everything possible to prevent outbreaks of brown rot so as to be able to finish this quality crop of the important fruits of the state now in the making.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

Cull Poultry Flocks to Save Feed, Money

It's money in his pocket and saved feed in the bin for the Charlevoix County poultryman who culls out his non-producers this summer, says C. G. Card, head of the poultry husbandry department of Michigan State College.

Card estimates that about 10 per cent of Michigan's 12 million hens are not now producing. If these birds were sold as meat, there would be affected a saving of 4,800 tons of feed worth $300,000. In addition, there would be the income from about 3½ million pounds of poultry meat. Poultry sold for meat will likely bring a greater return by fall. Card believes.

High feed costs and reduced feed supplies can be overcome only by culling the flock so as to maintain a 50 per cent production level all summer, he asserts. Here are two tips on how to spot the loafers:

1. The loafer is likely to be dull and mopey and stand with ruffled feathers. The laying hen is more alert, with bright eyes and seems to be busy.

2. The loafer's shanks may be thick, rough and deep yellow. The layer's shanks will be thin, smooth, and of fine texture.

Many 4-H club members and other farm boys are now engaged in extensive culling work over the state. This program, which includes training of the boys to become expert cullers is sponsored by the Allied Poultry industries, Michigan Poultry Improvement Association, and the Michigan State College poultry husbandry and 4-H Club departments. Farmers interested in details of the culling program and who would like to obtain information regarding the making and use of the Spartan poultry catching crate should consult the Charlevoix County extension office.

Nine Farmers Growing Certified Seed Potatoes

A recent announcement from the Michigan Crop Improvement Association lists the names of nine Charlevoix County farmers who have applied for inspection. This year only two varieties are being certified, the Russet Rural and Chippewa, totaling ninety-three acres. The following are the names of farmers applying for inspection:

Edwin Bradley, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 5 acres.

LeRoy Hardy, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 8 acres.

W. J. Petts, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 9 acres.

Howard Skornia, Boyne City, Russet Rural, 8 acres.

H. C. Stephens, Charlevoix, Russet Rural, 5 acres.

H. C. Stephens, Charlevoix, Chippewa, 8 acres.

Lee Snenthen, Charlevoix, Russet Rural, 22 acres.

E. P. Jensen, Walloon Lake, Russet Rural, 20 acres.

Carl Stevens, Walloon Lake, Russet Rural, 2 acres.

Elmer Hott, East Jordan, Chippewa, 6 acres.

Farmers are doing a splendid job of caring for these fields. They are spraying six or seven times with a high pressure outfit. They are treating their seed before planting. The fields are free from weeds throughout the season. All diseased plants are eliminated from the field. Thus, it is only proper that these potatoes receive a premium in price. Many local farmers would greatly benefit themselves by purchasing sufficient certified seed potatoes to establish a seed plot.

Saturday's rain was welcome even though it did end cherry picking for the day.

Mrs. Johanna Jensen, who was confined to her bed for a few days as the result of a fall, has recovered sufficiently to be up again.

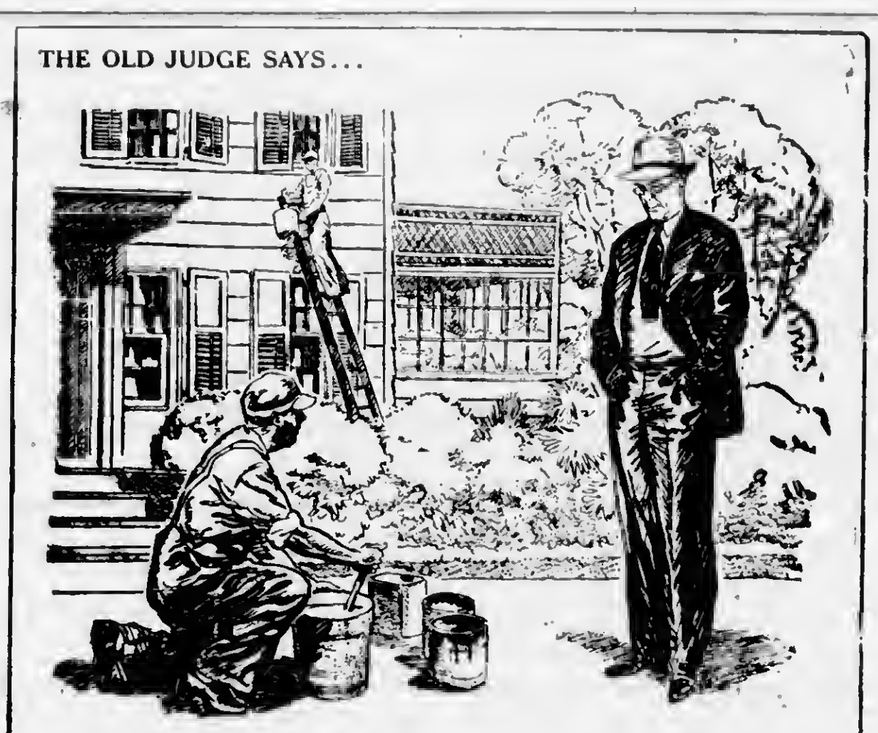
THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...



"I don't blame the fellows overseas for gettin' all het up over it, Judge. For the likes of me I can't see what's all the hurry about holdin' these local prohibition elections while they're away."

"I agree with you, Steve. Time after time... in their letters, in articles, in polls taken to get the views of our fighting men... they have indicated in unmistakable terms that they don't want any action taken on prohibition, either local or national, until they get back."

"Too bad there isn't a law or somethin' to be sure their wishes are carried out, Judge."

"There is in one state I know of, Steve. Just recently it passed a law prohibiting the calling of any prohibition election until a year after the peace is declared."

"That really makes sense to me, Judge."

MICHIGAN MIRROR

MACKINAC ISLAND—Five overseas battle casualties and three training camp casualties, convalescent patients from the Percy Jones government hospital at Battle Creek, sat on the floor of a partially filled railroad baggage car.

The Pennsylvania train, jammed with vacation-bound civilians was leaving Grand Rapids en route to Mackinaw City and intervening west coast resort cities.

No accommodations were available in the coaches.

It was the 1944 Fourth of July week-end, our third national holiday since Pearl Harbor.

And this happened in Michigan.

At the Grand Hotel, Mackinac Island, where the eight men were the personal guests of Stewart Woodfill, owner and president, we were shocked and angered when one of these valiants, Lt. Roy Murty, former artist from Detroit and New York City, casually mentioned the fact.

"Don't misunderstand me," he hastened to explain. "We're not complaining. After what some of these men have gone through, the floor of a baggage car isn't so bad. It's just a bit messy on your uniform, that's all.

"The cheerful spirit of these wounded men is wonderful — yes, marvelous. They're anxious, every man, to rejoin their old outfits.

"Major Robert Acheson, for instance, with the 504th Parachutists, a Commando regiment in Italy. The men jumped from the sky and became surrounded by Germans. Ammunition ran low.

"Acheson led a detail of ten men to fight their way through. The going was tough. Acheson, an all-around expert in handling weapons, was wounded in the shoulders. Ahead was a German tank, the last obstacle.

"As Acheson ran forward, a shell from the tank clipped off his right arm above the elbow. Instinctively, he picked up the severed member and stuck it under his belt.

"His orderly, unearthed by the murderous fire, wiped out the tank's crew of six Germans with hand grenades. Only Acheson and three others were alive when they managed to reach the American lines.

"For this valor in action, Acheson was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and the Silver Star. He's quite a guy."

There is no doubt that historic Mackinac, sold by the Indians to the English for $25,000 in the Revolutionary War, knows now it is in a war.

More than 300 years ago, Jean Nicolet, wearing a robe of Chinese damask, first saw this rocky isle in the straits between Lake Huron and Lake Michigan while he was seeking the elusive Northwest Passage to China.

Capt. Patrick Sinclair, a sturdy Scot, moved the fort from below the straits to the island in 1781 at the very time George Rogers Clark was making American history at Kaskaskia and Vincennes and menacing Detroit.

The bull-dogged English, stubborn as they are today, held tight to Mackinac following the Revolutionary War and until 1700. During the War of 1812 they seized it from the American garrison without firing a shot.

Federal troops manned the fort during the Mexican War and the Civil War.

The fort was a state park during the War with Spain and World War I. Today, 89 of the island's population of 517 persons are in the armed services.

Major Acheson and his companions may not have been aware that Mackinac Island, the historical shrine and for a good three-quarters of a century a nationally famous summer resort, reflected a thoughtful and sober mood on July Fourth, 1944.

Members of the Michigan Tourist Council and the Michigan Agricultural Marketing Council were concluding a three-day conference on post-war planning. Governor Kelly, Mrs. Kelly and the "Kelly Kids," as an island youngster called them, were there for a quiet rest at the only residence the State of Michigan provides for its gov-

All of the telephone people who work at the camps know what it means to a service man to be able to call home. They don't mind working hard to get those Long Distance calls through.

Busiest time is in the evening, when most of the boys are off duty. You will help them if you "give seven to ten to the service men."

My Sincere Appreciation--

While the primary vote of July 11 could not help but bring a personal satisfaction, to my mind it conveys a trend of constructive thinking on the part of the voters in relation to our government administration.

It will be my endeavor, if I am chosen as your Congressman in the fall election, to represent the district along those lines which the voters have approved, as indicated by their support of my candidacy in this and previous elections.

Many individuals have given of their time and effort in this campaign and they have my personal thanks. To the voters, many of whom I am unable to see in such a widespread district, may I, in this public way, offer my sincere thanks for their help, which I accept not only as support of my candidacy, but as support of the principles of government which our party represents in that great people's body — the Congress of the United States.

FRED BRADLEY, Congressman
11th District of Michigan.

INTERPRETING THE NEWS

ernor — a modest summer cottage adjoining the old fort that crests the hill by the harbor.

The John Jacob Astor house, headquarters of the American Fur Company a century ago, has been restored and is open to the public.

The Biddle log house, oldest building on the island, was purchased recently by Frank McKay of Grand Rapids and will be restored by him as a personal contribution to the state.

The old Earley house, famed for the medical studies of Dr. William Beaumont; has been purchased by the Park-Davis Company of Detroit and donated to the state as a memorial. Adrian N. Langius, state architect, was to arrive this week to prepare plans. At the Grand Hotel, with its world's longest porch overlooking the Straits, the Casino night club was dark for the first time in years.

As the battle casualties from Percy Jones hospital stepped from a trim, white ferry boat, the Mackinac Islander, they alighted upon a modern concrete dock.

This wharf, one of the finest on the Great Lakes, is the product of the new park and harbor commission, a utility of the city of Mackinac Island.

Near the Grand Hotel is a public bathing beach, three-quarters of a mile long, costing $17,000.

These improvements, as well as the Astor house restoration, were financed by a tax paid by steamship companies on their passengers. Thus the tourists are making possible, just as they have done at Bermuda for years, a gradual rejuvenation of this quaint, secluded, carefree island resort, so rich in historical lore under three flags.

Among the wounded Yanks at Mackinac were Lt. Paul D. Harrison of Lansing, member of the First Armored Division, who lost a leg in Italy; Lt. William Jeffries of the Third Division, who sustained a back wounnd from a bursting shell at Cassino; Lt. Harry F. Schafer, Columbia army air base, who got a broken arm when a B-26 skidded on the ice during a landing; and Lt. Charles Bolton of Niles, 36th infantry division, victim of a sniper's bullet while on night patrol in Italy.

In addition to Lt. Marty, who is a talented portrait artist, were Lt. Russell L. Holcomb of the Military Police Corps and Lt. Rex. B. Yocum of the 117th Field Artillery, 31st Division, both of whom were nursing training injuries — a broken arm and a twisted back.

From Sicily and Casino and now, Normandy in France, to the quiet picturesque island at the straits is a long, long distance.

Percy Jones patients are bridging that gap in small groups of eight men this summer.

They are giving to this health-giving northland a new purpose and vibrant significance.

Hundreds of other soldiers at Percy Jones would welcome such a blessing. Here are the men who, above all others, should be accorded the privilege of enjoying the bracing, atimulating air of northern Michigan and its scenery of inspiring grandeur.

Mackinac, at war, is thinking of these men with chastened humility. And so are we.

TOWN and FARM in WARTIME

Prepared by OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION

National Farm Safety Week

As a part of the National Farm Safety Week Program, July 23-29, the Department of Agriculture offers some simple safety rules for women and girls doing farm work for the first time. In handling machinery — read and follow instructions; stop machine for all adjustments and repairs; unhitch horses from machine before making adjustments; wearing coveralls with no loose parts to catch in machine. Speak quietly to animals when going close to them. Wear gloves for rough work. When sun is hot, wear a broad-brimmed hat, dark glasses when needed and if skin is tender use skin lotion. To be sure you can do heavy work safely, get a medical check-up. Move a ladder often instead of stretching. In lifting, use knees and keep back straight. Cleanse slight cuts and scratches and cover with sterile material. Wear whole, clean stockings and well fitted shoes with low, level heels. Eat three well-planned meals each day. When perspiring freely use one-eighth to one-fourth teaspoonful of salt to each glass of drinking water. When hours are long and the work is hard, eat a mid-morning and mid-afternoon snack.

Kerosene Has Gone to War

Kerosene use on the home front must be reduced wherever possible this year, the Petroleum Administration for War warns, because of the tremendous and increasing consumption of kerosene in vital war fuels. Diesel engines use a portion of which has been diverted from the manufacture of kerosene. Diesel fuel oil, made of approximately one-third kerosene fractions, powers bulldozers, Diesel trucks, caterpillar tractors, construction machinery, dock and yard locomotives, every American submarine and nearly 100,000 invasion barges. PAW calls on users to use sparingly of kerosene — also known as coal oil, range oil, lamp oil, burning oil and stove oil.

More Work Clothing

More civilian work clothing for men and boys is indicated by a War Production Board order requiring manufacturers of work clothing to produce during each quarter beginning July 1 at least 90 per cent of the number of garments manufactured during the third quarter of 1942. Items to be produced are bib overalls, dungarees, work shirts, one-piece work suits, pants, overall jackets and blanket-lined coats. In line with recent national legislation, manufacturers prices for the basic constructions of denim (used widely in manufacture of overalls) have been raised one cent a yard, the Office of Price Administration announced.

More Calls for Nurses

A call for qualified nurses to work in Veterans Administration Hospitals to help provide adequate care for disabled veterans has been issued by the Veterans Administration. Hospitals are classified in three groups — General Medical and Surgical, Tuberculosis, and Neuro-Psychiatric. Nurses work an eight-hour day, six days per week, with rotating shifts and additional compensation for overtime. Living accommodations may be obtained at the hospitals. Interested graduate nurses from recognized schools who are registered should write to Medical Director, Veterans Administration, Washington 25, D. C. A campaign to recruit 8,500 nurses for the Army and Navy — at the rate of 1,000 a month for the Army and 500 a month for the Navy — has been announced by the War Manpower Commission. Nurses in the Army now have the full authority of their officer rank.

OPA Price Actions

Prices for the 1944 crops of a number of fresh food items have been set by OPA. Potato prices will be the same as for the 1943 crop except that for July there will be increases in in the F.O.B. shipping point prices of 20 cents a bundredweight in Nebraska and 30 cents a hundredweight in Kansas, Maryland, North Carolina, and Virginia — states in which adverse weather caused decreased yield. Retail prices of 1944 sweet potatoes — with a national average of about 10 cents a pound over the 12 months — will be lower than for the 1943 crop, OPA says. Retail prices for the 1944 red sour cherries for table use or home canning will be about 18 cents a pound with stems and sold in containers and about 16 cents a pound without stems and sold in containers. The F.O.B. shipping point prices for these cherries in containers will be 11 cents a pound with stems and 9¾ cents a pound without stems. Sold in bulk without containers the price is two cents a pound less than the container prices. Highest prices for fresh peaches for table use should range from 14½ to 16 cents a pound, OPA says, as these peaches are now under price control for the first time.

Make Chain for Farm Uses

To provide necessary chain for farm uses, the WPB has issued instructions to chain manufacturers on filling orders for suppliers and dealers serving the farm trade. Chain that the WPB expects to keep available includes harness chain, wagon chain, cow ties, tie outs, halter chain, log chain under one-half inch and repair and lap links.

Calls for Shipyard Workers

Fifty thousand additional shipyard workers are needed to meet the ship construction needs for European and Far Eastern operations, Vice Admiral Emory S. Land, Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administrator, announced. "Every man or woman who is able to work in a shipyard, and not at present employed in essential war work, should report at once to the nearest United States Employment Service office for enrollment in this most essential work," he said.

Round-Up

USDA says — in all states, farmers who need lumber for essential maintenance and repairs on farms may get preference ratings AA-2 or AA-3, as high as those assigned to any other civilian use . . . Civilian butter supplies for the last half of this year will be shorter than for the first half, inasmuch as production during the next six months is expected to be lower than during the corresponding months last year and purchases for the armed forces are behind schedule.

Pacific Holds Wondrous Sights For U. S. Navy Man

Lt. Describes Red-Haired Fuzzy-Wuzzies, Banana-Hunt and French 'Girls', Seen At New Caledonia

Lt. Jack Kornfeld, 28, stationed in the New Hebrides as meteorologist with the army weather school, sent the following letter to his aunt, Mrs. W. H. Wallace, telling of his experiences on a trip to New Caladonia. Lt. Kornfeld who went oversens in September, 1943, is the son of Mr. und Mrs. Leo Kornfeld, of Chicago, who have a summer home at Boulder Park and has speat severul Summers here.

About 11 a. m. I fnund I would be able to get a ride down to New Caledonia at 1 p. m. so I rushed over to my tent to pack a small bag, borrow a field jacket and have my lunch, then I went over to the air field and waited for the pilot and crew to show up. Shortly after 1 we rolled down the taxi-way and in a few minutes were soaring over the Islund.

Words really can not describe these tropical islands as viewed from the air — below us were numerous groves of cocoanut palms distinguishable from the rest of the green growth below due to their pattern of straight rows; far back to the mountains the tropical forest stretched und up the slopes to the rather barren peaks at the horizon. So dense is the growth that a million people could lie beneath it in perfect concealment. At the water's edge the deep green of the luxuriant vegetations was suddenly replaced by narrow bands of white coral sand, glistening brightly in the noon day sun. Never have I seen such colors as those of the waters belaw us, not even when I swam in those same waters and hunted shells beneath the coral and rocks at low tide. The shallow waters of the lagoons and the shallow waters close to shore were a technicolor dream in blue, pink, brown, red and green; they have been called opalescent waters and that is really an understatement for they are far more colorful than the world's most precious opal and far more beau-

CONTRASTS

Leathernecks And Soldiers Enjoy Beach As New Drive Begins

By Capt. James A. Kelly
(Public Relations Officer, USMC)

BOUGAINVILLE (Delayed) — Certain phases of actions following recent savage battles on this island offer almost unbelievable studies in contrast.

The other day a United States warship fired scores of shells into Japanese territory only a few thousand yards south of the beach at Empress Augustu Bay. Smoke from the explosions could be clearly seen against wooded hills in the background. Marine dive bombers, perfectly visible from the beach, were blasting a Jap gun emplacement in the same sector.

Defenses around gun positions of a Marine unit and rumbling tanks raising clouds of dust on the road by Torokina air strip contributed to the war-like scene. Shells from our heavy guns were roaring out toward Jap-held hills, sounding like freight trains in the distance.

An offensive war was being carried on.

All the while, in the surf, American Marines, Seabees, and soldiers, together with New Zealanders and Fijian jungle fighters, swam and splushed unconcernedly. Others lay naked on the beach in the sun. Only a few watched the spectacle in the distance. To most it was a scene already too familiar.

AIRBORNE PERIL IN DETROIT

Poison Ivy Is Taking Wing

Residents of Wayne, Mncomb and Oakland Counties, especially those in urban centers, were warned Saturday by Edward Horn, Rosevill entomologist, that they are in peril of poison ivy infection from an airborne fungus though they may reside miles from areas containing the vines.

The fungus is brown in color and similar to ragweed pollen but much larger and more easily detected. Lately it has been found on many garden plants but more particularly the wild cherry.

"Strangely enough," Horn declared, "the fuogus is killing the poison ivy vines but in so doing is becoming 100 per cent more dangerous in the manner it is being circulated.

For victims, Horn advises the use of a paste prepared from naptha laundry soap, water and cold cream. He suggests six ounces of soap for every eight ounces of water and just enough cold cream to hold the mixture together.

GUARD AGAINST INFANTILE PARALYSIS

Here is the Health Department's advice on how to avoid infantile paralysis, which is likely to develop between now and October. Avoid overtiring and extreme fatigue from exercise. Pay careful attention to personal cleanliness, such as thorough hand washing before eating. Keep flies away from food. Do not swim in water polluted by sewage. Use safe water and properly pasteurized milk Keep children out of crowds. Avoid unnecessary contact with persons who are ill. If possible, avoid tonsil and adenoid operations during epidemic.

What Happened to the Master Race Here?

The answer to this is simple. These American paratroopers dropped out of the sky over Normany, took this French village and captured this Nazi tank. Herr Goebbels used to prattle that we were a decadent race. Sure, so decadent that foot soldiers can capture German tanks intact. Note that division insignia has been censored out. Are you backing up such brave men as these with War Bond purchases? From U S Treasury

MRS. MAYNE DIES AT 92, LIVED HERE SINCE CIVIL WAR

Mrs. Charlotte A. Mayne, 92, pioneer resident of Charlevoix and widow of the late Judge Frederick W. Mayne, died at the home of her son, Dr. F. C. Mayne, in Cheboygan late Wednesday evening. Mrs. Mayne made her home in Charlevoix until recent years. She had been in failing health for several years.

Charlotte Ainslie was born in Oakland county, Michigan, on March 10, 1852. As a young girl she came to Grand Traverse county with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Ainslee, following the close of the Civil War. After a short time there they settled in Charlevoix, then known as Pine River. At that time they were one of the few white families in the community. Her father and uncle, Gilbert Ainslee, held the mail contract for north Michigan and carried the mail from Traverse City to Cheboygan by pony and Indian runner with Charlevoix as a half way stop. Later when a state road was opened between Traverse City and Charlevoix, she was the first white woman to ride over it.

She received her education at Monroe and at the age of 16 was one of the first teachers in Petoskey when it was still known as Bear Creek. She later taught school in Charlevoix. Mrs. Mayne remained a student all her days, her great grief being when many years of life caused failing eyesight and prevented her following the ever present urge to acquire knowledge, her mental faculties being unimpaired.

Through her many experiences in her early days she has passed on many colorful stories of the Indians in northern Michigan and of the Mormons on Beaver Island.

In 1882 she married Frederick W. Mayne, who was circuit court judge in the 13th Judicial Circuit for twenty-five years. He preceded her in death in 1924.

Mrs. Mayne was a member of the Episcopal church and was active in the church Guild. She was a charter member of the Shakespeare Club which was organized in 1906.

Surviving are two sons, Dr. F. C. Mayne, of Cheboygan, and John A. Mayne, of Pasadena, Cal.; two daughters, Mrs. Marie Stacks, of Grand Rapids and Mrs. Harvey Savage of San Diego, Calif.; two sisters, Mrs. Flora Lewis, of Pasadena, and Mrs. Frank Kenyon, of Charlevoix; eight grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. One child preceded her in death.

Funeral services were held at the See Funeral Home at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The Rev. John Payne, of the St. James Episcopal church, Cheboygan, officiated. Interment was at the Brookside cemetery.

MISSIONARY FROM CHINA WILL SPEAK AT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Deaconess Katharine Putnam, Episcopal Missionary to China, will speak at the 11 o'clock service, Sunday, July 30th at Christ Episcopal Church, Charlevoix. Deaconess Putnam has spent 25 years in China doing missionary work among the natives in the interior. When Shanghai fell she was captured by the Japanese and confined in a concentration camp for about a year, when she finally was released and returned to this country last December on the Swedish ship, Gripsholm.

An unusually fine speaker, the missionary has a most interesting and instructive story to tell of her life and work in China and of her experiences as a prisoner of the Japs. All are invited to hear Deaconess Putnam at 11 o'clock Sunday.

ANNOUNCES MARRIAGE OF DAUGHTER, IN TEXAS

Mrs. Lillian Cramblit announces the marriage of her daughter, Glenna, of Muskegon, to Pvt. George F. Pant, of Fort Bliss, Texas, on Saturday, June 3rd, at El Paso, Texas. The bride wore a white afternoon dress and white accessories for her wedding.

The bride attended the Charlevoix schools and for the past year has lived in Muskegon. The bridegroom, who also attended school here, was employed in Muskegon for several years before entering the service in February. The couple made their home in El Paso, Texas, until the bridegroom was granted a furlough and they spent a week here, leaving Saturday for Camp Howie, Texas, where he will be stationed.

WAVES CELEBRATE 2ND ANNIVERSARY

To the WAVES on their second anniversary, July 30th, the Navy pays respects for a job well done.

This second anniversary finds the Women's Reserve of the Navy over 75,000 strong. Of this number, nearly 2,500 are Michigan women. The Navy hopes to have 100,000 WAVES by the end of 1944.

During their two years' service, WAVES have proved themselves worthy of the Navy's highest traditions. Women representing all 48 states are on duty at Naval shore stations in all parts of the country, performing more than one-third of the many different kinds of jobs vital to the smooth operation of the United States Navy.

An idea of the extent to which WAVES have taken over these important jobs may be gained from the fact that nearly half of all uniformed personnel working in the Navy department, Washington, D. C., are WAVES.

Michigan's biggest WAVE complement is at the Grosse Ile Naval Air Station where 207 of them are stationed.

The WAVES have proved their ability to take over many more different kinds of assignments than originally was expected or believed practicable. The 246 different jobs being done by WAVES include such specialized duties as tearing down and assembling airplane motors and raising carrier pigeons for communications work.

Because WAVES have shown such ready adaptability for numerous jobs they have been called upon to fill, the Navy twice has increased their enlistment quota. Originally, 11,000 was set as the number to be procured for the service. This later was increased to 17,000 and the present goal is 100,000.

Now that the Navy is carrying on the offensive in all parts of the world, the need is particularly great for the 25,000 additional WAVES, needed to bring the Women's Reserve to full strength. The United States has the mightiest Naval force in the world, but the effectiveness of our ships and planes depends upon the efficiency of establishments ashore. Hence the need for more WAVES.

Here, in the words of Admiral Ernest J. King, is how the men of the Navy feel about the WAVES:

"You, who are members of the Women's Reserve, have won the respect of the Naval service by your acceptance of military requirements, readiness for responsibility and already valuable contribution to the work of winning the war. You will share the gratitude of a nation when victory is ours."

Correction:

In a recent issue of the Courier in an article on the death of Tech. Sgt. Isaac Denemy it was stated that he was survived by his sister, Mrs. Guy John. The item should have read Mrs. Peter John.

A reporter's word picture of Michigan in mid-July, 1944:

Lake cottages and resort hotels are jammed to the limits. The 1944 vacation season in Northern Michigan, and many parts of the Upper Peninsula, promises to set an all-time record for attendance and expenditures. George Bishop of Marquette, manager of the Upper Peninsula Development Bureau, tells of visiting the Keweenaw highway commission's park and cabins out at Copper Harbor on the week-end of June 24-25. "More than 200 travelers were there," he confided. "Don't ask me how they got to Copper Harbor which can be reached only by automobile. I don't know."

Michigan, the world's automobile center, is awaiting 1946 which now appears to be the earliest date when production of cars can be resumed. As contrasted to California and other states where aviation is predominant, Michigan has an estimated "backlog" of seven billion dollars in automobile manufacture. It should absorb much of the economic shock that will be inevitable when war plants are reconverted to peace-time utility.

The transportation situation isn't a bit good. The ODT estimates that 5,000 autos are getting junked per day. Automobiles are wearing out. Trucks are near to a serious deterioration point, especially heavy-duty trucks that haul freight interstate. Railroad passenger trains are overcrowded, and travelers can expect continued discomfort, delays, poor service. Busses are filled, standing room only is common. Strangely enough, air travel is the only service on which improvement is in sight, as plane-space priorities will be abandoned around September 1st.

To get a close-up of how global war is affecting Michigan, just look around your own block, if you reside in a town or city. Or survey the neighbors along your rural route. Rare is the house that does not have a service flag in a window. Michigan has sent approximately 500,000 men to war. Nationally, there are more than 5,000,000 Yanks overseas and there will be more than 7,000,000 by the year's end.

Social unrest is shown by the number of realty transfers and railway travel. Labor turnover

FOSTER RECEIVES HUGE WAR ORDER

CANVAS CONTRACT EXCEEDS QUARTER MILLION DOLLARS

The Canvas Division of the Foster Boat Company announces award of a contract from the Detroit Ordnance District of the Army Service Forces for a large number of canvas truck covers. Production will begin and additional help will be employed as soon as materials arrive.

Some interesting statistics have been revealed by the Foster Boat Company which help one to visualize the quantities of materials that must be processed to complete this contract. The canvas, if laid in a strip a yard wide, would reach from Charlevoix through Traverse City and Cadillac to a point 3.3 miles this side of Reed City — a distance of 127.7 miles. The rope required totals 536,800 feet — a length slightly in excess of the highway mileage between Charlevoix and Cadillac, by way of Traverse City. The length of thread to be used is computed at 993 miles (that's better than two month's driving on a "B" sticker.) The combined length of stitching will exceed 331 miles — or a distance from Charlevoix to Dubuque, Iowa, as the crow flies.

This contract, the largest war order received to date by the Canvas Division, is rated as an emergency requirement and production will be pushed to the limit of the company's present facilities.

FRONT-LINE NEWS ITEMS

From France—

Pfc. Marvin V. Pedersen writes the following letter from somewhere in France to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Pedersen: "This is the first chance I have had to write for we have been in battle for some time. It sure is tough, but it doesn't take long for you to learn what to do. We were in the battle for Cherbourg but we don't know yet what the place looks like. For a while it sounded like the Fourth of July at home.

We were giving them everything we had on my birthday. Did you have a birthday cake at home? I could taste it over here. I hope next year will see me at home. Keep on writing."

With First Division—

Pfc. Robert B. Livingston, who is somewhere in France with the famous First Division spearheading the invasion writes to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. MICHIGAN HEALTH NEWS

Accidents caused seven of every 100 deaths in Michigan in 1942. Of 3,685 deaths due to accidents, 1,309 were in the home.

Through July 13 there had been 18 cases of poliomyelitis reported in Michigan for 1944. A new pamphlet on poliomyelitis is now available without charge from the Michigan Department of Health, Lansing 4.

Because smallpox appeared in three counties of Michigan this month, Dr. William DeKleine, state commissioner of health, urges all persons who have not been vaccinated in the past five years to see their family doctor or health officer at once.

Many cases of food poisoning could be avoided if proper care were taken in refrigerating foods, according to the Michigan Department of Health. Custards, meats and any foods which have cream in them should never be left outside of a refrigerator.

During the first three months of 1944 there were 26,115 babies born in Michigan, compared with 30,260 births during the same period last year. This decrease is general throughout the country.

Fresh vegetables should be cooked quickly and only until tender, according to the Michigan Department of Health. Vitamins and minerals wash out in cooking so it's wise to cook vegetables in as little water as possible and use the vitamin-rich water in gravies, sauces, and soups.

From January 1 through June 9 there were 24,873 cases of measles reported to the Michigan Department of Health. During the same period there were reported 1,873 cases of whooping cough, 6,051 cases of scarlet fever and 116 cases of diphtheria.

Deaths in Michigan were down slightly for the first three months of 1944. The Michigan Department of Health reports 14,830 deaths against 15,011 for the same period last year.

is still high. People are on the move. Theaters are thronged. Betting on horse races has reached dizzy heights. This craving for entertainment is a part of the war picture, an inevitable escape from war jitters. A good laugh is a good mental tonic. That's one reason the newspapers still continue the daily comic strips, despite stringent rationing of newsprint. People demand them.

The Michigan Mirror forecast December 30, 1943, that the Nazis would surrender unconditionally by late autumn of 1944, still stands. If our American troops continue to receive a sufficient flow of munitions and supplies, and American industry — labor and management in a team — WILL not fail them, it's better than an even bet that the German war will be over before the Michigan landscape is covered with snow again. This is THE time to deliver the goods! Shortening the duration of the war against Germany may save the life, or limb, of that kid next door — or, perhaps YOUR own son! Stay on the job and buy another bond!

Shortage of manpower for the army and factories, shortage of oil and other vital supplies, and inability to overcome the Allied superiority in arms and airplanes due to the terrific punishment given to German arms plants by Allied bombings — these are the things that are pinching Germany most at present.

Hence, the urgency for more increased production in American armament, for more manpower controls, for driving ahead to fight both wars at once. Gen. George C. Marshall, Gen. Henry H. Arnold, and Adm. Ernest J. King recently signed a joint statement warning against optimism over early military victory and urging war workers to stay on their jobs. They reported that successful battles, such as the Normandy landings, involved heavy equipment loss which must be replaced by American industry and that slackening of production will delay victory.

The WPB reports that over-all war production was 1 per cent BELOW schedule in May, with the principal lab being in ammunition, motor vehicles and radio and radar equipment. Material and labor shortages are blamed. It is not generally known that the serious shortage of motor trucks compelled the government to recondition used trucks for shipment to our troops overseas. In June the airplane output slumped 8,042 units from May's total of 8,902, although heavy bomber production exceeded quotas.

The July 11th primary produced two significant results: The victory of Auditor General Vernon J. Brown of Mason over Dr. Eugene C. Keyes of Dearborn for the Republican nomination of lieutenant governor, and the triumph of Edward J. Fry over two opponents, William J. Daly, of Detroit, and Ernest Brooks of Holland, for the Democratic nomination of governor. The two-to-one vote of Republicans over Democrats has been interpreted widely as a sign of a continued trend of Michigan voters to Republicanism. Marquis Childs, newspaper columnist visiting Detroit, reported a Michigan swing to Dewey, a native son.

Democrats will center their efforts to re-elect President Roosevelt as a warring "commander-in-chief." This is smart strategy especially so since the Republican nominee was born in 1902 and hence is a "young man" of 42. Edward J. Fry, Democrats' standard-bearer in Michigan, is expected to rely heavily on the urban vote in industrial centers — such as Detroit and Flint. Fry is an independent who differed with Governors Frank Murphy and Murray D. Van Wagoner and declined to go along with the state committee's selection of Brooks as a tentative nominee. He conducted a vigorous campaign and may produce a surprise or two on the stump before election day. It's gRusevelt and Fry — any resemblance of humor being purely accidental!

Try This "Egg Shortcake" Recipe

American hens have set new records in production and eggs are cheap and plentiful now. They're nutritious, too, rich in iron, vitamins A, B_2 and D, and also contain calcium, phosphorus and thiamine. They can be used in breakfast, lunch or supper dishes.

The flexible, easily controlled gas range is practical for cooking eggs, because they must be cooked slowly to prevent the protein from becoming tough. No longer are the advantages of modern gas cookery limited to city housewives, for homemakers everywhere, in cities, semi-rural or rural communities, are using liquefied petroleum gases as cooking fuel. This fuel, known as "bottled" or "tank" gas, is being delivered to nearly 2,000,000 homes away from the city gas mains.

Protein-rich eggs are point-free and make satisfying main dishes. Try them creamed, in between layers of shortcake, as in this recipe:

Egg Shortcake.
(Serves 6)

6 hard-cooked eggs
3 tablespoons butter or substitute
3 tablespoons flour
1½ cups milk
Rich Shortcake Dough.

Melt butter, blend in flour. Add milk gradually, stirring constantly. Cook until thickened, then add sliced hard-cooked eggs and cook for a few minutes. Serve between layers of shortcake and garnish with quarters of egg, paprika and parsley.

USE BLUEBERRIES AS DESSERT VARIETY

Use blueberries for more than just a breakfast fruit, served with cream and sugar suggests Ruth M. Griswold, assistant professor of foods and nutrition at Michigan State college.

This year, Michigan growers of cultivated blueberries are expected to harvest a 600,000-quart crop. A part of those berries would provide the fruit ingredients for two very tasty dishes, Miss Griswold believes. She suggests that the homemaker try blueberry muffins and blueberry mold. Here are the receipes:

Blueberry Muffins

2 cups family flour
1-3 cup sugar
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg, beaten
1 cup milk
3 tablespoons melted fat
1 cup fresh blueberries

Sift the dry ingredients. Combine beaten egg, milk, and melted fat (slightly cooled). Add to dry ingredients. Stir until flour disappears but not until batter is smooth. Fold in blueberries, mixing as little as possible. Fill the greased muffin pans two-thirds full, handling the batter as little as possible. Bake in a hot oven at 425 degrees F. for about 25 minutes. This recipe makes 12 medium-sized muffins.

Blueberry Mold

1½ pound (9 slices) bread
1½ cups sugar
3 cups fresh blueberries
1 tablespoon lemon juice if desired.

Remove crusts from bread and cut into small cubes. Add sugar to berries. Cover and cook slowly until berries are soft. Add lemon juice if desired. Rinse a bowl or mold with cold water. Put in alternate layers of berries and bread cubes with berries. Pack firmly. Chill thoroughly, unmold on serving plate and garnish with whipped cream. This recipe makes six to eight servings.

Michigan's commercial blueberry industry is located chiefly along the lake between Muskegon and the Indiana line. From a quarter-acre planting made at the college's South Haven Experiment station in 1923, the industry has expanded in 1943 to 500 acres. Stanley Johnston, superintendent of the station, estimates this year's cultivated crop to be worth about $400,000. This does not include the crop to be harvested from wild bushes growing chiefly in northern Michigan.

FARM SAFETY WEEK IS JULY 23 TO 29

Even a minor accident is a serious threat to any farm. Farmers should take extra care to keep themselves and other farm workers from getting knocked out of the production line by accident. This extra care will not only safeguard the operations of each farm, but it will result in a larger supply of food and fiber for the nation, says E. G. McKibben, head of the Michigan State college department of agricultural engineering and state chairman of the National Farm Safety week, July 23-29.

There is a special problem in farm safety education at this time, declares Professor McKibben. Thousands of persons who have had little or no safety instruction are helping out on the farm front; 4,000,000 emergency workers are needed this year. Unless skillful help is given these persons in accident prevention, the accident rate will be much higher than that of experienced farm workers.

Machinery appears to be the chief source of farm work accidents, with livestock close behind, in the opinion of the agricultural engineering specialist. Falls are in third place. For the home, falls rank first, with burns second. Safety to farmers and farm workers is vital to victory now. But safety is important all the time — in peace or war — for the well being and happiness of farm people.

As safety measures, McKibben urges farmers to avoid excessive haste and over-fatigue.

CHARLES K. HARDY IS IN AMPHIBIOUS FORCE

Charles Kenneth Hardy, S2c, whose parents reside at 102 Green street, is preparing for duty with the amphibious forces aboard an LST—Landing Ship, Tank—one of the biggest ships in the Navy's invasion fleet.

S2c Hardy has been assigned to the crew of an LST at the Amphibians Training Base, Camp Bradford, Va., where he is going through strenuous training required of bluejackets who man the beach-hitting tank carriers.

Heavier than a modern destroyer, the 300-foot LST lands assault troops and equipment directly onto enemy beachheads, under the protective bombardment of heavy warships and Navy planes.

Despite its size and weight, the landing vessel is designed to navigate shallow approaches to hostile beaches, spilling its troops and tanks ashore through huge bow doors.

Camp Bradford, where S2c Hardy is stationed, is one of a group of bases operated by the Amphibious Training Command of the U. S. Atlantic Fleet along the eastern seaboard. The Bradford base alone is readying thousands of Navy men to operate the ships of the amphibious fleet, fast growing toward its year-end goal of 80,000 now landing craft.

PICKLE NEWS

By H. E. Brumm, Dist. Mgr.
H. J. Heinz Company
Charlevoix, Mich.

This section must produce and process a very large volume of cucumbers to meet the year's requirements of pickles for the fighting forces and civilians, according to reports reaching here from Washington. Overseas demands are so heavy that Army experts are working out plans to use sliced or chopped pickles to better utilize available shipping space.

It is now estimated that the cucumber acreage in the country will show an increase of about 6% over the record for 1943, but as the armed forces will need more pickles than last year, the government has already ordered processors to reserve a large percentage of the 1944 pack to meet the Army and Navy requirements.

Michigan, where the cucumber acreage is almost double that of any other state, is naturally expected to produce a large percentage of this pack.

As a large crop is expected from this district, community cooperation will be necessary to harvest and process the 1944 production of cucumbers. Boys and girls, among others, will be recroited to aid in harvesting the crop and there will be part-time and full-time jobs for workers from 16 up in the E. J. Heinz Company Pickle Stations. Students, teachers, ministers, housewives, merchants, bankers and men who have retired from active business may find employment in the emergency seasonal work of receiving and processing the local cucumber crop. This is important work, as green cucumbers are very perishable and must be handled promptly.

MICHIGAN OUT-OF-DOORS

Playground News of Field and Stream

DOWAGIAC—A 31-inch brown trout weighing 11 pounds, two ounces was taken recently from a deep pool in the Dowagiac river near his home in Wayne township by John Pendergrass, using worms on a No. 5 hook.

In the 100-odd years since farmers began clearing land in Michigan, the once-abundant gray squirrels have become relatively scarce, while fox squirrels, which formerly were scarce, now are relatively abundant, especially in the southern counties.

The ninth law enacted by the first Michigan legislature (1837) was a wolf bounty law.

LANSING—Marked lack of cooperation on the part of deer in southeast Clinton county is delaying tests of a gadget developed as a crop-protecting device.

A number of crated carbide "exploders" were taken recently to a field on a Michigan State College farm near Bath where deer forays were threatening experimental plantings of head lettuce and sugar beets. The devices which produce a loud bang and flash at regular intervals are being tested by the conservation department in various sections of the state as a comparatively cheap means of protecting farm crops from deer damage.

No deer have been seen in the vicinity of the college farm since the test was ordered, although they had been frequent visitors previously. The "exploders" are still in their crates.

ALLEGAN — Game animals trapped alive at Swan Creek wildlife experiment station near here are supplying information about their habitat preferences that will be useful in improving state game areas in other southern Michigan localities.

Raccoons, opossums, and woodchucks are caught oftenest in traps nearest to water. Most fox squirrels are taken in oak woods that are supplied with nest boxes, and rabbits are taken oftenest in thick cover of oak sprouts.

Kind of cover is determined by counting all the species and sizes of trees, the number of den trees, ground burrows, nests, brush piles, nest boxes, etc., around each trap. Ninety-six live traps are operated.

The conservation department now manages 15 state game areas in southern Michigan.

LANSING—Education and not more legislation is the solution for the state's hunting accident problem according to Harold Lillie, Lansing, chairman of the Michigan Hunting Accident Prevention Committee.

Lillie said that the committee, appointed several months ago by P. J. Hoffmaster, director of conservation, had agreed that further legislation restricting hunters in the use of firearms would prob- of education in the proper and ably do little to lower the annual accident rate, but that a campaign safe use of guns might do much to reduce the accident toll.

The committee has recommended to the conservation department that it produce a motion picture and a series of film strips showing the right and wrong ways of handling firearms and that these pictures be widely circulated next fall through the schools, the various industrial plants, and among other groups. It was suggested that appropriate posters be shown in all places where hunters congregate and that extensive use be made of radio and the newspapers.

The Michigan United Conservation Clubs, made up of about 150 Michigan organizations, have pledged their support by offering to sponsor local campaigns of safety education in their communities, Lillie said. Luncheon clubs and chambers of commerce will also be asked to help.

During the 1943 hunting seasons, there were 183 gun accidents of which 29 were fatal. Eleven fatal accidents occurred during the small game season and 18 during the deer hunting season.

MANY NEW OPPORTUNITIES OPEN TO WAC'S

The Women's Army Corps offers many new opportunities to new recruits, according to Lt. H. F. Lauterer, district recruiting officer, of the U. S. Army Recruiting Station, WAC Branch, Grand Rapids.

These opportunities include the privilege of choosing one's own branch of service, of designating the job to which an applicant wishes to be assigned, and of picking the post at which a recruit wishes to be stationed for her initial post assignment.

The Army Air Forces, Army Service Forces and Army Ground Forces all need thousands of additional Wacs, and recruits may select their branch of service and they will be assigned to the posts or bases of the particular branch they wish to join.

Applicants may designate the jobs to which they wish to be assigned and job assignments will be made consistent with one's civilian training and qualifications. Women who have no specialized training or those who wish to enter new fields of work will be trained by the army if found qualified. Women with college or specialized training may be assigned to highly technical jobs with the Medical Corps or Signal Corps.

The present recruitment procedure allows women to pick their initial post or air base within the geographical limits of the Sixth Service Command, comprising Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin. Thus women desiring to remain near their home will be assigned to posts within Michigan.

There are 239 different types of jobs being done by Wacs. These include such interesting and vital work as airplane mechanics, weather observers, Link trainers, radio operators and repairers, medical and dental technicians and assistants, control tower operators, parachute riggers, drafting, map sketching, photo laboratory assistants and many more. These jobs done by Wacs are all part of the one complete war machine that helps the Army Air Forces to "keep 'em flying," the Army Service Forces to get the "mostest there the firstest" and the Army Ground Forces to do their job. The work done by Wacs has been praised by every service command chief and by officers in charge of every post where they are stationed.

The WAC presents to every eligible woman (you must be 20-49 years of age, with two years of high school and no children under 14) an opportunity to travel, to meet new friends, to do interesting work, and, above all, to take her proper place in the war.

Permanent WAC recruiting offices are maintained at Chambers of Commerce in Charlevoix, Traverse City and Petoskey, and at the district U. S. Recruiting Station, WAC Branch, 117 Ionia Ave., N. W., Grand Rapids, Mich. Women of northern and western Michigan are urged to apply now to the recruiting station nearest their home for information and enlistment. Inquiries from any territory may be addressed to the district office in Grand Rapids.

NEWS FROM CAMP CHARLEVOIX

The annual water carnival held at Camp Charlevoix will get under way Saturday afternoon at 2:30. Camp counsellors in charge of the events include J. Smith, D. Smith, Henderson and Woerner. If weather conditions should be unfavorable an obstacle relay will be held between the Grey and Green teams. Swimming races will take place in junior, intermediate and senior classes in 25, 50 and 100 yards events, both free style and special style. In the hunting department canoe tilting and canoe bobbing is scheduled.

The "Bungling Brothers" three-ring circus was held in the lodge Saturday night and drew a capacity audience. Side shows and a clown parade were held in the afternoon.

Inspection honors for cabins during the first four week period was awarded cabin 2 and 13. Boys in cabin two include Frederic Bruce, Bob Eberhart, Joey Hahn, Bob Scher, Jack Schneider, Walter Simmons and Charles Tippy. Bob Mulligan is the cabin counselor. Boys in cabin 13 are Ronald Brown, Dick Donovan, Mike Foster, Bud Loranger, Tommy Tomlinson, Lawrence Walker. The cabin counsellor is Jack Maguire.

In the athletic department during the past week Angell's baseball team still holds top honors with seven wins and no defeats. Nyquist's team is close behind with six wins and one defeat. Snyder's team has lost four games and won three; Tomlinson's team won one and lost six; Ewbank's team, won two and lost five; Noel's team, won one and lost six. The varsity camp team challenged the counsellors to a second game Sunday afternoon and were turned back 37-2. Nyquist, Walker and Brown pitched for the varsity and Maguire and Henderson held up for the counsellors.

Scores in baseball games played during the week follow: Snyder's 15, Ewbank's 14; Nyquist 17, Snyder's 10; Ewbank's 25, Tomlinson 19. Basketball results found Angell's team defeating Noel's team in a tight finish 24-23. In another game Angell's team swamped Ewbank's quint 60-5; Sluter was high point man for the winners with 16 points.

Eight new campers will arrive here Thursday. These boys include Jim Van Deusen, Calkie, Van Deusen, Phil Van Deusen and Micky Van Deusen, all of Ann Arbor; Edmund Shiens, of Gary, Ind.; John Lerch and Bob Lerch, of Kokomo, Ind.; Gene Gilmore, of Grand Rapids.

Dr. Jere Bauer, doctor of internal medicine at the University of Michigan hospital, Ann Arbor, will arrive this week end to take over the duties of camp doctor. Dr. Kenneth Campbell, instructor in surgery at the University hospital, who has been here since the opening of camp, will return Saturday to his duties at the hospital.

Fishing honors at camp to date are held by counsellor Bob Livermore who have exhibited a five-pound smallmouth bass and a six-pound large mouth buss taken from Lake Susan. Dr. Campbell lost an "old mossback" Monday night when his line parted after the fish rushed under his canoe. Several of the boys at camp have hooked onto "tigers" but have lost their plugs and line in trying to land them.

A hard wind storm in the early evening Sunday took part of the pier apart and turned over several sail boats. All able-bodied swimmers jumped to the rescue and saved equipment from more serious damage. Lights were out at camp for the evening and a song jamboree was held before the fireplace in the lodge to warm those who had been in the water. Repair work was started Monday morning and the schedule at the waterfront resumed on Tuesday.

Visitors at the camp over the week end were:

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Foster, of Grosse Pointe Farms, who visited their son, Mike Foster.

GASTRONOMY — HOW TO PUT JELL IN JELLIES

Do you remember when grandmother had trouble putting the "jell" in jellies? Or, once in a while, when she turned the jelly out on a plate, it would stand but not quiver, and the color was dark and the jelly had lost the fresh fruit flavor?

One of the reasons for her trouble was the lack of a range with quick-cooking facilities. Long cooking always reduces fruit flavor, darkens color, and may even break down the pectin which is responsible for the "jelling" quality.

Now, quick-cooking gas ranges make jam and jelly making easy and are available everywhere. Even homemakers living in saburban, rural or semi-rural areas have regular gas service through "bottled" or "tank" gas.

For quivery, tasty blackberry jam, use these directions: Wash and bull berries, allowing ¾ cup sugar for each cup of fruit. Mash fruit as it heats. Bring to boiling; add sugar and cook until thick—not more than 20 minutes. Seal in hot, sterilized glasses.

Athletes Foot Germ
How to Kill It
The germ imbeds deeply. Can't be killed unless reached. Many liniments and ointments do not penetrate sufficiently. Ask any druggist for Te-ol solution. Made with 90% alcohol. It PENETRATES. Reaches more germs. APPLY FULL STRENGTH for itchy, sweaty or smelly feet. Your 35c back tomorrow if not pleased. Locally at
F. S. MYERS, 225 Bridge St.

tiful. I am not just making up words when I say they seemed like "enchanted waters" from some ancient fairy-tale, the sight of which bewitched the beholder who was so brazen as to gaze upon the beauty reserved for the gods.

And then the spell was broken for we veered away from the land and the opalescent waters which so magnified the beauty of the coral hidden below, and the deep blue sea stretched itself endlessly before us. We were flying at about 7,500 feet now and the rather turbulent sea looked smooth with small ripples disturbing the calm and the specks indicating the presence of large breakers.

As we passed an island nearby I noticed a rather unusual sight for this part of the world —large areas of grass lands to the lee of the mountains. It is rather a large island so these grasslands were rather extensive. Usually the entire surface of these islands are covered with dense tropical forests but in this case the mountains must atop enough of the rainfall to cause this area to be too dry for forest growth, hence the grass.

The plane was one of those serviceable C-37 transport planes and I sat in the passenger section with a lot of baggage for company most of the time, although I did spend 45 minutes with the pilot and navigator up front. After we were out for awhile it started to get rather cloudy and the beauties of the sky replaced those of the water. Everything was clear and the next minute we were swallowed in a dense fog (ran through a cloud) climbing to get above a rapidly gathering overcast. Suddenly we broke out of a cloud and below us was a vast sea of white, glistening brightly in the sun. All around us were huge mountains of towering cumulus clouds, some of them rising 6,000 7,000 feet above our plane. It is another world up there over a cushion of soft, fluffy stuff with boiling vapor bulging out the sides and tops of the big cumulus clouds. We traveled for some time in the midst of these mountains and plains of white, and all the time I was looking out of this window and then that to get a good view of the surroundings.

And as suddenly as it began, the overcast disappeared and there below us was the rugged coast line of New Caledonia. Here the coastal waters are not quite as brilliant but colorful nevertheless, and as one sweeps past the white beaches and the green undergrowth, there rise large and ragged mountains, quite barren of vegetation, which are noted for their unusually bright red and red-brown coloration. All the mountains of New Caledonia are red and there are a lot of them for the island is mostly mountains and valleys, the East coastal plain being very narrow and the west plain not too wide. We soared over the mountains and valleys through which twisted narrow silver streaks, streams which sometimes flowed along smoothly and at other times dashed down high waterfalls. The famous Naoli tree which is supposed to be the reason New Caledonia is free of malaria, looks like weeds on the hillsides due to the tree's white bark which stands out because these trees are sparsely located. Finally we emerged from the mountains and circled for the landing.

Safely on the ground I made for the weather station to find some of my former boat companions. Found Lt. Newton working in the station and we gabbed for over an hour before going to their quarters to deposit my bag and wash up for dinner. Renewed acquaintances with Lt. Korn and Lt. Aagenstein — both from Brooklyn and both interesting characters — then went to dinner. Think we have a nicer officers' mess but they get fresh eggs and more fresh fruit and vegetables down there. After dinner went to the show — saw "Cover Girl". Then we went over to the Officers' Club and saw the movie they were showing "Jane Eyre."

After the show we returned to their quarters for a little shuteye. I was to sleep in an extra cot in Lt. Barnett's tent. Finally we went to bed because it was too cold to stay up any longer — the temperature down there gets down to 40-50 degrees and that is cold when for months you haven't experienced anything less than 70 degrees. I went to bed under a mattress cover and two blankets folded double and even then my feet got cold, for these tents are not heated and have nothing but sides of fine wire which keep out the bugs but not the cold. As usual morning came too soon but I had to get up for we were going on a trip and fresh fried eggs for breakfast are things you don't want to miss.

I had talked the boys into taking a trip across the island after I discovered that none of them had been anywhere except to Noumea, the capitol of New Caledonia and to their swimming hole up one of the mountains nearby. About 8 a. m. we were ready to go when Newt got the bright idea of taking the top off the jeep which I had objected to for he had personally forecast ruin and we had all agreed with him—ah—agreement among weather officers is a rare thing, no matter what the topic. Well, he had the top off and stored away before anyone could stop him so away we went without it for we didn't have time to put it back on. We had to get to the mountain road before a certain time because it is a one way road and there are certain times you can go in each direction. If we were late the MPs wouldn't let us through the pass since on most roads, two cars could never pass without one of them landing in the valley thousands of feet below. Even then we got there ten minutes late but the MP said it would be OK to go ahead for we still had two hours to get across the 25 mile pass.

Dave did most of the driving with Newt in the front seat with him and Al and I sitting in the back seat. It was very pleasant driving along with the top down so we could get unobstructed view of the scenery and feel the pleasure of cool, refreshing air. We had put a couple blankets on the seats in order to make them a bit more comfortable for the long and rough trip. So—all in all—our little outing started out very pleasantly and it continued in the same way except for an interlude of rain during the afternoon.

As we wound deeper into the mountains the road grew rougher and narrower until there were only a few extra feet between us and the great eternity. Most of the road was built by scraping and blasting a narrow shelf into the side of the mountain; and as we drove along we passed small groups of natives (Fuzzy-wuzzies with hair dyed red) at 'work' fixing the road here and there by taking a shovel-full of dirt or gravel from one spot and putting it in another — a few road workers were French, but most of them were "Kanakas" (black natives) with a sprinkling of Tonkinese scattered among them.

We were driving, for the most part, on a ledge which wound through the mountains with the valley about 1,000 to 1,500 feet below us and the peaks rising another 1,500 feet or so above the road. Most of the trees on the hillside were Naoli trees with their white bark. These trees look like they are related to the white birch but actually they are closely related to the eucalyptus. A few scraggly long needled pines try to compete with the Naoli trees for attention on the landscape; both are awkward looking with branches going every which way and not very tall. Further up the cliffs are barren but the red clay and rock give them a fascinating beauty. In the valley a tree winds its way among the rocks with occasional fields and lonesome ranches and native huts dotting the view; ever present are a few cows trying to become mountain goats in their hunt for fresh pastures. And—by the way of comment—these cows are usually fat and healthy looking.

Innumerable creeks and streams trickled and poured from the hillsides, many of them un-bridged so that we crossed their beds which are fairly dry at this — the dry season. After the first few miles we could look back and see the bay and the ocean and the trailing ribbon of road behind us. And ahead of us was one of the most rugged mountain roads I have ever seen (but I didn't know what roads we were to see this day.) Once in a while I looked over the edge of the car and almost always was greeted by a yawning chasm of nothingness below for the little jeep just about filled the road which was barely wide enough for one of the 1½ ton trucks. After several stops to take pictures and to view the scenery and almost two hours of torturous travel, constantly winding along the ledge, we emerged into the widening delta of the stream which was winding its way below us. Palm groves, fields of corn and grain and picturesque ranches and villages dotted the road. It seemed intensely civilized after the desolation of the pass we crossed. And suddenly — wonder of wonders— the road was paved with asphalt.

Across our view suddenly appeared one of the quaintest villages I've ever seen. Along a rather narrow street were rows of multi-colored houses with wide spaces of lawn between them and colorful gardens full of beautiful flowers, native men and women were scattered along the street dressed in colorful skirts, blouses, sarongs, Mother Hubbards, etc. We drove along the road to the ocean and then decided it was time for lunch; so we returned to the town and ate a fairly tasty lunch of soup, roast beef, potatoes etc., and a glass of French port wine at the local "hotel". Of course we paid a $1.00 for our lunch as it seems the French can only speak certain words like "one dolar", five dolar", etc.

After lunch we followed a local road to a very nice beach which was adjained by another group of native French dwellings. The beach was very beautiful with its rows of palm trees along the shore, a long stilled freighter rusted on the shore, a strangely shaped, huge rock cliff rising out of the ocean and the usual white beach and coral studded waters. We hunted shells for a while and then went "jeepin" our way along. Our next stop was to take a picture of a local train which ran back into the valley. The ore in this section which is brought down from the mountains by enble cars which operate by gravity (the loaded cars pull the light empty cars up the incline.) The engine looked like last century's model (probably was) and the cars were all open.

From the train we went to visit a beautiful church and grounds with a colorful and picturesque village attached. All the churches I saw in these remote parts of the Caledonia were on the same pattern with pinkish stucco wall, tall steeples, red roofs and a statue above the entrance. The church was Catholic and the decorations of the interior would make many an American church dingy in comparison. Guess all the statues and the colorful decorations have a strong appeal for the natives who certainly do like bright colors — really quite beautiful. The native quarters consisted of several score of white stucco huts with thatched roofs and surrounded gardens with thousands of poinsettas dominating the scene. There was a long avenue lined with poinsettas leading through the native section to the church which was the most colorful setting I have ever seen— Pasadena and Hollywood notwithstanding. There are many other things I could tell about— for example, a small mob of native children crowded about us until we took their picture, but hard as we tried we couldn't get them to smile. We nicknamed them the "Frowners".

While it would have been interesting to spend several more hours in the village, we had to get moving since each of the two that we had decied to take in order to return by a different route were open to one-way traffic the direction we had to travel only at certain times. And so it was that about 1:30 we were traveling along the shore north of the town. The shore road didn't last long as we shortly turned up a narrow valley and soon were traveling along the shelf above the valley. Up and up we traveled, crossing ridges into new valleys and always on this narrow shelf with the drop below us getting deeper and deeper all the time. Each new ridge we crossed was like entering a new world for each new system of mountains and valleys was different than the one preceding it — more wild, more colorful, with an increasing amount of vegetation and strange trees and plants. There were palm ferns extending several hundred feet into the air, growing on the sides of the precipitous ledges. There were Naolia trees and long needled pines and cocoanut trees and all kinds of vegetation which only a botannist could identify.

Right in the middle of the pass we came upon an ancient French citizen riding horseback and leading a pack horse. Naturally we stopped in order not to knock the man and the horses into the great unknown thousands of feet below. We squeezed out, the jeep against the red rock wall and the character passed us slowly on the remaining two feet of the ledge which remained to the side of our jeep. I shall never forget the sight of that Frenchman disappearing around the cliff in the middle of nowhere leading his pack horse like an ancient traveller.

Suddenly we wound down out of the cliffs to the valley floor and through innumerable plantations to a little town, which was quite dirty and not as quaint and beautiful as the first one we visited. We stopped at a general store on the main street and purchased a few souvenirs — bracelets, shell beads and large shells. I flirted with three French girls —ages 4, 5 and 6 repectively. Seemed good to see little white children — makes you realize even more what you are missing in this remote part of the world.

When we came out of the store a strange sight greeted our eyes —an ancient Renault automobile was parked outside and out of it climbed an even more ancient Kanaka with a very dignified beard and posture. Newt wanted to buy the horn on the car which was one of those 'you squeeza it and it squeaks' type, but the native demurred by saying "I can't sell you the horn for the French police would arrest me for not having a horn on my car but I will sell you the whole car"—all in French of course. Needless to say, the horn stayed on the car and the car stayed with the native. Characteristic of the relic of an age long since past were the tires, which had one casing over the other until it was impossible to tell whether there was any inner tube or air in the tires. Perhaps some of the folks at home are driving vehicles in a similar condition.

Took a few pictures and then headed for the pass through the highest mountains in this section of the island, which was the only way to get back to our base without returning the same route after dark, and driving on these roads is a pleasure we chose to forego. After missing the right road a few times what with the directions we'd received in French, we finally started up the pass. It was just time for the traffic to start in our direction so we went right ahead. Then suddenly a big GI truck came tearing straight at us, disregarding the rules which are supposed to govern the traffic on this road. We stopped the truck; had had to stop for there wasn't enough room to pass; and asked him what the big idea was and if there were any more trucks behind him. He said that they were delayed in collecting fruits and vegetables from the ranches and that there were two more trucks behind him. We eased a bit and then found a spot to slide the jeep in so the truck could pass and then drove slowly until we passed the two trucks loading fruit at the fruit entrance to a plantation. It was fortunate that this passing occurred at this point in the road for shortly thereafter we travelled for 25 to 30 miles with no wide spot for passing. After a bit it started to rain and we wrapped the blankets we had been sitting on around us to keep from getting too wet.

The rain let up after about an hour but the road was a little slippery and becoming more rugged all the time. Finally we passed over a ridge and entered a new valley of huge proportions with the valley floor thousands of feet below us. Although it appeared to be desolate at first glance, there were plantations and ranches scattered throughout the length and breadth of it. Bananas —on banana trees of course — grew along the side of the road, but each time we saw a likely bunch and stopped to get them we found that the tree was growing at the side of the ledge and it was impossible to get them without a thousand foot ladder. Such is life on a banana hunt. I saw for the first time a new species of pine which towered several hundred feet above the scraggly Naoli and palms. It was a beautifully formed tree, slender and straight, which lent the valley a new dignity not found in the other spots we had visited this day. We passed waterfalls above the road, the chasms under which the water flowed being bridged so we could pass over it. And in the valley we saw waterfalls tumbling down from 700 to 1,000 feet out of gorges cut deep into the red mountains.

Just as it was growing dark we came out of the pass and soon were in the last village on our route. After numerous inquiries we found a French restaurant frequented by numerous GIs who said the food was good. Had an excellent meal served by a pretty little French girl.

Got back to our quarters about 9 p. m. and immediately heard the news that our boys have invaded Europe. Turned on the radio and sure enough, while we were sightseeing in New Caledonia thousands of American soldiers were establishing the American flag on Hitler's Europe.

Left New Caledonia Wednesday morning on a Navy plane and soon was back "home" with a host of pleasant memories of a very interesting land. Many people have visited New Caledonia, I have no doubts that few of them have seen the real beauty of the island in the small villages hidden in the mountains and in the mountains and valleys themselves —spots so beautiful that all these words fail to give proper expression to the sights you see and the beauty you feel — all my verbosity notwithstanding.

GASTRONOMY

CARE FOR YOUR REFRIGERATOR

Do you treat your refrigerator as a catch-all for leftovers and pleasantly forget about them?

Or, do you give the refrigerator the place of respect it truly deserves as food insurance?

The Liquefied Petroleum Gas Association gives a dozen simple rules on the care and use of refrigerators. The association represents the industry which produces propane and butane gas and delivers them in bottled or tank form to homes away from city gas mains, for use as fuel in gas refrigeration, gas ranges and gas water-heaters.

1. Remove paper wrappings from foods before storing in refrigerator.
2. Wipe off milk and cream bottles.
3. Wash and clean vegetables and fruit before storing. Wash berries just before serving.
4. Place uncooked meat (unwrapped) under freezing unit.
5. Allow foods to cool before storing and make sure they are covered.
6. Watch leftovers and use them attractively.
7. Place foods to allow for free circulation of air throughout refrigerator.
8. Keep bottles and cans at room temperature until ready for chilling and serving.
9. Open and close doors as quickly as possible to preserve cold.
10. Clean refrigerator by wiping with a damp cloth often. Wash with a weak solution of baking soda.
11. Use ice trays for frozen salads, ice creams, mousses, and for colored and flavored ice cubes.
12. Defrost regularly according to manufacturer's instructions.

MYSTERIOUS EPIDEMIC WIPES OUT MILLIONS OF SMELT IN LAKES

By John Van Oosten, In Charge of Great Lakes Fishery Investigations, Fish and Wildlife Service, U. S. Dept. of Interior.

In June 1943 issue of "News from the Fish Front," I told about our '43 smelt program and referred to the heavy mortality of the fish. Then all evidence pointed to the near extinction of the tremendously abundant smelt populations in Lake Michigan and Huron, although records of the 1943 production had not yet been compiled. The 1944 season was anxiously awaited in the hope that something might be learned concerning the extent of the decimation.

A comparison of Michigan's 1942 and 1943 commercial catch records for the months of January to April inclusive is now possible. It may be explained that practically all of Michigan's commercial production of smelt is taken during these months in Green Bay. The records indicate that the 1943 yield in January (907,000 pounds) was 6.7 times as large as the 1942 take for the same month, indicating that the smelt were perhaps more abundant in 1943 than in 1942. In spite of the fact that the epidemic struck the smelt in Green Bay in the third week of February, the 1943 catch (766,000 pounds) was nevertheless almost the same as in 1942, again suggesting an increased abundance of smelt. In March, however, normally the month of greatest yield, the 1943 output was only 42,200 pounds as compared with the 1,283,000 pounds taken in 1942. In April, 1942, some 63,700 pounds were produced; in April, 1943, none was reported. In addition, it was estimated that in 1942 some 5,618,000 pounds of smelt were taken by dip-netters from streams during the spring spawning runs. In 1943 the dip-net catch probably did not reach 100,000 pounds.

These figures bring out the fact that in all probability the 1943 season would have been a record year for smelt had not the mysterious epidemic struck the species. It may be recalled that the disaster began in Lake Huron somewhere north of Saginaw Bay about September, 1942, and spread progressively northward into Georgian Bay, through the Straits of Mackinac, across northern Lake Michigan including Lake Charlevoix but excluding Crystal Lake, and finally reached Green Bay in mid-February, 1943.

The winter of 1944 saw no commerical production of smelt at all except for a few scattered pounds. The largest dealer in smelt sent me a sample of 50 fish (five pounds) and wrote "this represents one-half of our winter catch." How about the smelt runs this last spring? The first run appeared on April 12th at Port Huron in the St. Clair River. The fish were few in number and small in size. On April 20 about 200 pounds were dipped from Smith Town Creek located between Thompson and Manistique. These smelt were of the usual size. Small runs were also reported on about April 24 at East Tawas and Escanaba. No other runs have been reported so far in Michigan and none have occurred in Wisconsin so far as I know. It is of interest to record here that the first spawning run of smelt has been reported for the Canadian shore of both Lakes Erie (near Rondeau) and Ontario (near Kingston). The epidemic did not reach these two lakes nor Lake Superior where the species has not yet become very abundant.

The disaster that wiped out uncounted millions of smelt in Lakes Huron and Michigan has created a widespread public interest. Newspapers throughout the Great Lakes have featured articles on "The Great Smelt Mystery" and even the magazine "Time" has carried the story. I have received letters from as far west and north as British Columbia, Oregon, and Manitoba, and as far south as Alabama offering varied explanations of the mystery. The letters suggested such interesting explanations as a change in the chemical composition of the fish, super "sonic" vibrations which disintegrated the nervous system, overpopulation which led to mass suicide, and sabotage by Japanese. However, these and many other more reasonable suggestions are untenable in the light of all the known facts. The progressive movement of the mortality thru the dense populations of smelt wherever there was a possible close contact between individuals suggests an infectious disease. Thus, for example, the smelt died in Lake Charlevoix where they had free access from Lake Michigan but did not die in Crystal Lake where the access from Lake Michigan was cut off by a dam. If the disease theory, which explains all known facts fairly well, is unacceptable then the devastating mortality of the Great Lakes smelt must remain an unsolved mystery.—Reprinted from News From the Fish Front, a monthly newsletter sponsored by the Institute for Fisheries Research, and the Fish Division of the Museum of Zoology, University of Michigan, for their men in service.

Editor's Note—For those wishing further light on interesting natural phenomena such as the mass suicide of lemmings and eels there is an absorbing article in the Saturday Evening Post of July 15th, "The Mystery of Migration," by Ivan T. Sanderson. What is termed mass suicide is not so far-fetched as it sounds as a theory accounting for the disappearance of our smelt, but Van Oosten's logic holding to disease is, no doubt, the likely one.

Two Recipes for Point-Free Pork

Point-easy pork is good eating if thoroughly cooked to bring out the full, rich flavor.

Rural housewives who have modern gas ranges supplied with "bottled" or "tank" gas are fortunate, for they can easily maintain the constant low temperature necessary to cook pork so it is uniformly browned, with a crisp but not hard crust so that it slices neither crumbly nor dry.

Cooking pork is fuel-saving because of the low temperature used, and that, too, is important, for butane and propane in these gases have gone to war. They fortify high-test aviation gasoline, treat and cut metals, and make synthetic rubber and dynamite.

Here are point-wise recipes for homemakers who want to take advantage of economical pork cuts:

Drumsticks.
(Serves 6)

1¼ pounds lean pork, ground
⅓ cup fine bread crumbs
1 tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
1 egg, beaten
1 tbsp. grated onion
⅓ cup milk

"Good Soldier"

The proudest title in the Army

IT CONSISTS of two simple words.

Yet every soldier who's worth his salt covets it.

This title is simply:

"Good Soldier."

It isn't just happenstance that so many women in the WAC have earned this title—the proudest in the Army.

For wherever Wacs are working, both here and overseas, there you find a job well done. And done with a spirit so gallant and fine that high Army officers everywhere say of the WAC...

"They're soldiers. Good soldiers!"

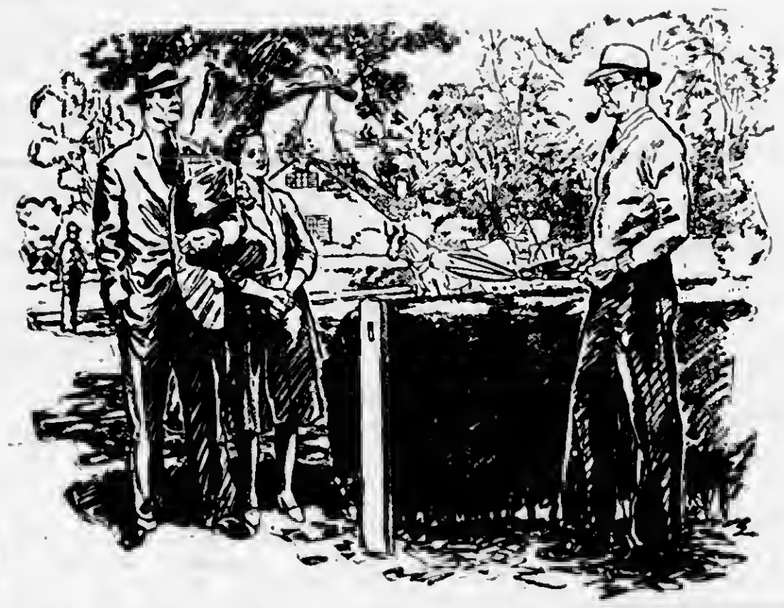
THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...



"Mary and I were just saying, Judge, how lucky we are here in America that we have so many natural resources to help win the war."

"That's right, Jim. When war broke out we had oil, we had steel, we had food, lumber, aluminum...practically everything we needed. There's one thing we didn't have...rubber. The enemy had that."

"But that didn't bother us for long. Soon American brains and industry had synthetic rubber by the tons rolling out of plants. That filled a critical need...you can't win a war without rubber."

"I was very much interested the other day in reading a statement made by a high government official on synthetic rubber. In it he said 'It is fair to regard the rubber manufactured to date as being almost solely the product of the beverage distilling industry.'"

"He also said that, in his estimation, the tremendous contribution of distillers' industrial alcohol to the synthetic rubber program had not received the recognition which it deserves."

"We certainly learned something today, didn't we Mary?"

USE CHICKEN'S AGE AS COOKING GUIDE

Old hens and spring chickens will crowd markets near places where they are raised during the next six months. The supply of chickens for sale will be heaviest in July, August and September.

Shortage of feed will cause many farmers to cull their flocks sharply to get rid of loafer hens and even some layers. Limited facilities will make difficulties in shipping many of these birds far, so local markets will get most of them. Scarcity of storage space for the heavy supply of chickens will mean that chickens must be canned or frozen for next winter's use — or eaten now to prevent waste.

For the homemaker who has a savory chicken supper in mind, home economists at Michigan State College suggest these rules for cooking poultry;

1. Know a young chicken from an old, and cook according to the right method for the age of the bird. Marks of youth in chickens are: flexible cartilage on rear end of breastbone, tender skin, soft meat, few hairs, and soft smooth feet. Broil, fry, or open-pan roast young, tender, well-fatted birds. Braise in a covered casserole or covered roaster lean young birds or hens past their prime for roasting. Cook very old birds long and slowly in water or steam. Then strip meat from the bone and use as a base for dishes cold or hot, such as chicken salad, chicken a la king, chicken loaf, croquettes or souffle.

2. Cook birds of any age at moderate heat so the meat will be juicy, tender, and evenly done to the bone with little shrinkage. This way of cooking is economical of fowl and fuel.

3. When poultry, either raw or cooked, must be stored a day or two, keep it cold. After it is cooked, if it is not to be eaten immediately, chill it quickly.

HELP AVAILABLE FOR COMMUNITY FOOD PROGRAM

LANSING—Federal assistance will be granted to all authorized agencies which purchase agricultural commodities for processing and distribution to schools, child care centers and other eligible institutions under the support program of the War Food Administration, Office of Distribution, announces Miss Sylvia M. Hartt, executive secretary of the State Nutrition Committee.

Any community canning center or school that has adequate facilities to accept and process commodities in the quantities to be delivered and can secure approved outlets for the processed foods is eligible to act as a sponsoring agency for the program. One school may act as agent for a group having individual agreements.

Inquiries regarding the program should be addressed to the District Supervisor, Office of Distribution, WFA, 333 Barlum Tower, Detroit, 26, Michigan.

His programme will include songs by Haydn, Schubert, Schumann, Saint-Saens, Debussy, and others. His musical intelligence is remarkable and his voice is always true and sweet.

One of Chicago's leading critics says of Andre: "He sings with consummate taste, clear diction, in French, Italian, German and English.

The programme will also include harp solos played by Susanne Porter, of East Jordan. Miss Porter is well-known locally for her talent.

The concert is a benefit for the Christ church, Charlevoix and a silver collection will be taken.

MILLION 4-H'ERS WILL TAKE PART IN NATIONAL FARM SAFETY WEEK

One million 4-H club boys and girls throughout the United States will do their part in the observance of National Farm Safety Week, July 23 to 29, to help 'Save Manpower for Warpower.'

This will be the second year that 4-H'ers have participated in a nationwide safety program to impress farm people with the vital need of preventing accidents on farms that result in 18,000 deaths and 1½ million persons injured annually. Last year more than 400,000 club members in 31 states enrolled in the National 4-H Farm Safety Activity, and made a very creditable showing. Members in 44 states are enrolled in the activity this year.

As outstanding achievement incentives in this year's 4-H Farm Safety Activity, William C. Mennen, of Newark, N. J., is providing roundly $10,000 worth of honor medals, U. S. War Savings Bonds, National 4-H Club Congress trips and college scholarships as awards respectively to county, state, sectional and national winners. In addition, the county in each state reporting the most outstanding 4-H safety program in 1944 will receive a special plaque designating the honor.

RUNAWAY BOYS FROM CAMP ARE PICKED UP

Two boys, William Joles, 14, and Harry Hill, 15, who ran away from the Vacational school camp at Traverse City, were picked up in Cheboygan, Saturday evening, after stealing a Ford car belonging to Glenn Rose from in front of his home at 304 State street about 9 o'clock Friday evening.

The car was found by Cheboygan police after it was reported to the State Police in northern Michigan. Several articles including binoculars and gas coupons were missing from the car when it was found.

The boys, two of thirteen who left the camp where the boys had been brought to pick cherries, were returned to Charlevoix and are being held here for trial in probate court. Joles is from Cheboygan and Bill from Muskegon.

Veterans of World War II have an opportunity for voention-al-technical training and rehabilitation when needed, at Pine Lake Camp which is being opened this month by the Office of Veterans' Affairs, and operated by the State Board of Control for Vocational Education.

"The purpose of the camp is to bridge the gap between hospitalization and employment for those veterans who have been disabled or are in need of a period for reeuperation before attempting to return to work, to give training to them, and also to provide trnining for other discharged veterans who may not have required hospitalization," according to Col. Editorial Comment On

Governors' Conference

By Lois Schneffer

Thirty-six of forty-eight State Governors attended a recent conference of state chief executives. These men representing a composite view of the nation's requirements adopted resolutions dealing with important subjects of the day, such as tuxation, duplication of effort by federul und state ngencies, disposal of surplus war goods, reconversion, and post-war military policy. Conforming to the strong conservative trend they exhibited in connection with most matters, the governors, with an eye toward curlnng the expenditure of public monies, declared that the task of furnishing peace-time jobs "belongs primarily to a just, competitive system of free enterprise which must depend upon the inventive and orgunizing genius and the energy of our people."

After World War I we turned economic readjustment completely over to the "organizing genius and energy of our people." The result is too familiar to us all. First there eame the "roaring twenties" with industries, expanded because of previous wartime production, turning out frigidaires, radios, and all consumer goods as fast as their wheels could roll. But — such expansive production demands that there be purchasing power in the hands of most of the people to effect a balance between supply and demand. And this purchasing power must have been lacking because along about 1927-28 warehouses became stored with surplus goods that few could afford to buy. The "inventive genius of our people," however, — in this case particularly big business — refused to heed the warning flag. They had big

CHARLEVOIX MAN GETS UNUSUAL JOB IN THE SERVICE

Unusual jobs have a habit of cropping up in the nrmy and Sgt. James Raymon, stationed ut Camp Indian Bay, Brooksville, Fla., seems to have one of them. In a recent letter he writes: We are testing new equipment which no one has seen yet for the use of jungle fighters. One thing is a new rayon hammock which will be more comfortable for fighters who use them.

The condition under which we test all this equipment is much the same as it would be in the South Pacific area only we're not dodging bullets. The camp is located on the Gulf of Mexico with a town about 20 miles away.

We have to put up with mosquitos, snakes, spiders and heat. We live on new rations that are being tried out for the first time. Most of the boys lost from 10 to 25 pounds in 5 weeks.

We weur new types of clothing. An effort is being made to make the new clothing and equipment lighter and more compact and we have new shoes, socks, nets, gloves, raincoats, helmets and even little stoves which one can carry in his pocket to heat C, K or 10in1 rations.

In this way they can pick out the equipment and clothing which will make our soldiers the best equipped in the world. I'm glad to be able to have a part in that job.

Andre Aerne, phenomenal boy soprano, will give a benefit recital for Christ Episcopal church on Friday, August 11th, at 8 p. m., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. Walter Mower of Irnnton.

Mower's have kindly opened their spacious home "Gwellentop" for the aecosion.

Susanna Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Porter of East Jordan will render several harp elections.

Andre, 12 years old, is son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Aerne, of Oak Park, Ill. While Andre was born in America he has spent most of his years in Switzerland, coming to the United States at the age of 7. He gave his first public recital in Chicago for Chicago Commons.

In May, 1944, he gave his debut recital in Kimball Hall, Chicago, before a capacity house. The Chicago critics, Claudia Cassidy of the Tribune, Harnnn Deveries of Herald American and others predict a brilliant future for the prodigy.

Andre's mother, Elizabeth Harris Aerne was born in Charlevoix in the house that now belongs to the Paul's of East Lansing. His grandfather James W. Harris was an engineer in Charlevoix in charge of constructiou when the railroad and bridge was built.

The Aerne's spend their summers at their summer home on Lake Charlevoix.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

It was threshing time in Tecumseh, Michigan, last Saturday.

And the "Lord's wheat," planted by Perry Hayden, Tecumseh flour miller, on land provided by Henry Ford, again demonstrated the truth of John 12:24 and its law of natural increase.

"It's the Lord's wheat, not mine" is Hayden's way of explaining why his plantings have been half as thick as nearby "stands" and yet produce 50-fold which is about double the average annual Michigan yield.

Hayden, a Quuker, has dedicated the entire crop to a holy purpose. He remarks casually on the fact that he has been "lucky" enough to plant on low valley soil, and get fat yields in drought and dry sensons when the highland crops "burned up" or "blew down" in high winds. And yet the next year or two he planted on highland, just in time to uvoid a succession of valley floods that destroyed all crops along the streambeds.

When drought or floods threaten, Hayden finds peace in this philosophy: "I'm not worried. It's all the Lord's wheat. He can do what he wants with it."

Ex-Governor Chase S. Osborn, "Michigan's Grand Old Man", had returned to Michigan from his winter home in Possum-Poke, Ga.

In the Founder's Room, Book-Cadillac Hotel, President Warren E. Bow of Wayne University conferred upon Osborn the honornry degree of doctor of science in natural science, the seventh honorary degree to be so presented to him by an institution of high learning.

He said that the local center which was organized four years ago and has been operating since then under adult supervision was the ideal recreation hall in not only towns of this size but in larger communities and it was the object of the Governor's committee to create other such centers throughout the state. The local center, he said, was one of the first planned ventures in the states. He offered suggestions as to management and recreations which the local Council feels will be of great assistance when the new Fall program is planned for the opening of the school year.

State Challenges College's Right To Keep Books Private

The Defense-Finnnce Committee of the Administrative Board laid Down the Rule, that where reimbursement from the Federal Government to colleges for Army-Navy education exceeds sums advanced by the State to the colleges to provide this service, all the money should be paid by the colleges to the State. In other words, if there is a profit, the State and not the colleges shall have it. The issue arises in connection with the University of Michigan, which will return $550,000 advanced, but objects to opening its books to show what the Federal Government paid. The University now is seeking $800,000 more, but the Defense-Finance Committee objects.

The real issue has to do with the right of the University to keep its books privately. Lnnsing administrators, and particularly legislators, have for years sought to make the University budgets as public as the budgets of State administrative depnrtments, but the University claims complete control of its finances under the constitution.

CLAIR WEBSTER, JR. SELECTED FOR NAVY

Clair Webster, Jr., 18, whose parents reside at 503 Petoskey Avenue, Charlevoix, has been selected by the Navy for duty aboard an LSM (Landing Ship Medium), latest and most advanced design in the nation's growing fleet of amphibious ships.

Webster is assigned to an LSM crew at the Amphibious Training Base in Little Creek, Va., where he is training for service as Quartermaster with the amphibious forces.

Newest of 15 types of invasion vessels designed for the Navy's offensive operations, the LSM combines features of the 328-foot LST (Landing Ship, Tank) and the smaller LCT (Landing Craft, Tank). Its shallow draft, powerful engines and landing-ramp bow enable the LSM to unload assault troops and equipment directly on to enemy beaches, under the protective cover of heavy warships und attnck planes.

Webster joined the Navy in December, 1943, and went through recruit training at Great Lakes, Illinois. He attended the Quartermaster School at Bainbridge, Mnryland, for 16 weeks.

'RED-HEAD'

W. FRANK KNOX WAS MICHIGAN GO-GETTER

"Red-blooded red-head."

That's Frank Knox us Michigan remembers him, according to the Grand Rapids Herald whose editor Frank Sparks, was assaciated with Knox at the Sault Ste. Marie Evening News, 42 years ago.

Friday evening August 4, at the Ojibway hotel, Sault Ste. Marie, as part of the 1944 war conference for Upper Peninsula Newspaper Publishers, Mr. Sparks will give a talk on "At the Soo with Frank Knox." Mr. Knox served as president of the Michigan Press Association in 1904.

Col. Knox—W. Frank Knox was the name he used in his early years—was a Grand Rapids newsboy when he was 11. And nt 15 he left school to help his parents. At 19 he was traveling salesmnn at $15 a week.

He attended Alma college, but he had to work his way through. He did it by painting advertising signs on the barns throughout the countryside. There wasn't much to yell abont in that, but he took out his yelling on the football field. He was captain of the college team in a day when footbnll lacked the "nngels" it now boasts and it was Col. Knox's job, in nddition to playing, to find the wherewithal to keep the team going.

He frequently came t Grand Rapids in those days to solicit contributions. Anything from 25 cents up. And he was a terror on the gridiron, plunging and yelling.

Came the war with Spain, and Mr. Knox left college to enlist in Teddy Roosevelt's Rough Riders.

HELPING THE VETERAN COMPLETE EDUCATION

ANN ARBOR — Making sure that every returned veteran who wants to continue his education gets started right, the University of Michigan is helping an average of 10 to 12 a week to map out a program covering the months or years immediately ahead.

Two surprising things mark this help to the veteran. The first is the thoroughness with which the University goes after the job. The second is that in more than one-third of the cases so far, the University has suggested to men who wanted to enroll at Ann Arbor that their individual case would be better served at some other institution.

As soon as it was determined that veterans would be returning to the campus in numbers, the University set up a Veterans' Service Bureau. Its purpose is to see that the former soldier or sailor gets every possible help the institution could give.

Right from the start the Service Bureau has been guided by two basic ideas: that each man is an individual and his case and needs are to be considered as such; that each man has many sides besides the educative one and all must be taken into account if a satisfactory educational program is to be worked out.

The problems brought by veterans vary as widely as the men themselves. Some who apply are well prepared for University work, know what they want. Others need to make up deficiencies in special classes given for them. Some may have enough high school credits but be unfitted in other ways for University work.

To find out just what the veteran is and can do, the University offers the most thorough and complete testing and guidance service available anywhere in Michigan. Their work coordinated by the Veterans' Service Bureau, there are 17 counseling and testing services and agencies on campus ready to help any soldier or sailor. Included are academic; vocational and religious counseling; tests for ability, aptitude, achievement, mental hygiene.

Since the primary object of the University is to help the veteran plan the best possible program for him — and not just to enroll another student — his record, ambition, talent all are appraised. Every one, and particularly those not enrolled, has a concrete and individual program mapped out before he leaves Ann Arbor.

An example of how the system works is that of a soldier from a neighboring state who wanted to prepare for a business career by enrolling in the Business Administration School. His high school record was anything but good. Tests showed he was not inclined to carry through on a long, difficult task. He wanted results right now instead of later. In short, the University suggested that he enter a business college instead of starting out on the five-year course here.

MICHIGAN WANTS SEPTEMBER VISITORS

Every cottage and every resort in this neighborhood is filled with visiting guests and will be filled well into the latter part of August. This same condition exists along the West Michigan coast and the demand for accommodations has not let up since early in the season. Most of the Michigan resorts will stay open through September to take care of those who were unable to get vacation accommodations during July and August.

While the cottages and resorts are filled to capacity the crowds at the amusement places are small. Most of the visitors are content to lie on the beaches all day, and they go to bed early at night. Many of them have not had vacations for several years and they are here to rest — and they don't want anything else.

Turkeys for Armed Services

Michigan turkey producers can help provide a traditional American holiday dinner for the armed forces overseas and in this country, even though the state is not included in the recent set-aside order issued by the War Food Administration.

Turkeys produced in Michigan can be marketed in the normal way this year, but the producers who want their birds to go overseas for our fighting forces or to military and naval encampments in the United States should market them as early as possible to processors who will prepare them for purchase by the U. S. Quartermaster Corps. Names and addresses of processing plants where Michigan producers may sell their turkeys will be supplied by Frank Blood, Dairy and Poultry Branch field representative, Office of Distribution, War Food Administration, 5 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill.

SUMMERTIME MEAL SUGGESTIONS GIVEN

When the weather is hot, the homemaker's thoughts turn to keeping cool while cooking, and to serving meals not too hot and heavy. Here are some summertime hints from extension home economists at Michigan State college.

First, continue to serve balanced meals — the kind that include during the day milk, fruit, a green and yellow vegetable, and so on. Anyone who does the same job the year 'round needs enough calories in food to provide for the energy spent.

Keep meals simple. Dishes that take short cooking and little preparation often have the most appetite appeal on a hot day. Many egg dishes are quick to prepare. Cooking on top of the stove leaves the kitchen and the cook cooler than baking.

Make the most of fresh vegetables and fruits. They are natural summer foods, neither rich nor calorie-loaded. Raw juicy fruits make quick, appetizing desserts. Serve raw crisp vegetables often — carrot strips, turnip or cucumber strips, wedges of cabbage, pieces of cauliflower and sliced or quartered tomatoes.

If iced beverages are the family choice, do not let them prevent the family from getting the regular quota of milk in some form, such as in cooked foods, cheese or ice cream. Milk itself is refreshing when served cold, as it should be to keep safely.

If there's a porch or other place to eat, cooler than where meals are regularly served, this change of setting adds to comfort at mealtime.

Serving cafeteria style, letting the family fill their plates at the stove, saves one person from taking many trips back and forth on a hot day.

Home Canners Advised How to Avoid Deadly Botulinus Poisoning

"THERE is vital need to can as many vegetables as possible as well as fruit; but the only safe way to can any vegetables, except tomatoes, is by correct use of the pressure cooker," advises Katharine Fisher, Director of Good Housekeeping Institute. "This method is the only one which provides the hotter-than-boiling heat that's necessary to kill botulinus germs which may be on any non-acid food you can—and that means all vegetables except tomatoes. When botulinus germs are not killed in the canning process, they thrive in sealed jars and create a powerful poison.

"This botulinus poisoning comes from bacteria that live in the soil and cling to vegetables. Although rare, this poison is particularly dangerous because it usually does not change the food's appearance, odor or taste. Analyses of soil indicate that there is a chance that botulinus spores may be found almost anywhere. Fortunately, they are harmless until they get in air-tight jars of canned food."

Use Pressure Cooker

"Correct use of the pressure cooker also protects against other types of spoilage," Miss Fisher said. "A recent national survey showed that home canners who put up non-acid vegetables by the hot water bath method reported a hundred per cent greater rate of spoilage than those who used the pressure cooker method."

"Never taste in discover spoilage," Good Housekeeping advises "All home canned products should be examined carefully when opened and, if there is any evidence of spoilage, the food should not be used."

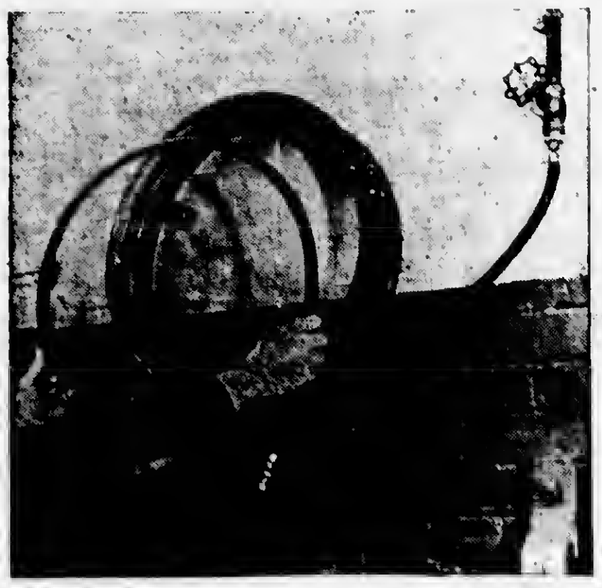
OLD AUTO RIM HOLDS HOSE



A fast convenient reel for air or garden hose is easily made by attaching an old auto rim to the wall near the faucet or in the storage compartment. A pile of hose is unsightly, gets in the way of sweeper or lawn mower, and other hazards which shorten the expected life of the hose. When coiled on a rim, each wrap takes up about five feet and is easily handled, resulting in pride of ownership and tidy appearance.—Agricultural Engineering, Michigan State College.

Playground News of Field and Stream

LANSING — Increasing forest fire hazards in northern Michigan counties, result of recent dry weather, have lifted the season's total of fires to date to 771, or 48 more than were reported during the whole of 1943.

Acreage loss so far this season totals 12,152 as compared with a 1943 loss of 18,563. Last week's loss, as reported by the conservation department, was 331 acres, with 59 fires reported.

LANSING — Mechanical berry pickers may again be used this season on state-owned lands because of the war-occasioned shortage of labor, the conservation commission has ruled. The commission lifted the ban for the first time last season for the same reason.

LANSING — With importation of furs reduced nearly one-half because of the war, Michigan trappers are looking forward to another profitable season. Their take of 1,104,143 pelts in 1943 ranked Michigan in fifth place among the states.

The fur catch in the United States and Alaska last year was worth approximately $100,000,000 to trappers, according to a recent report of the U. S. Department of the Interior. At least 19¼ million animals were taken by trappers during the year and this figure may be considerably below the actual take since a number of states do not keep accurate records of the catch.

Louisiana, in the number of pelts taken, far out-ranked all other states, with a total of 4,470,498. This was due to the tremendous muskrat population found along the many miles of creeks, rivers, and bayous in the state. Out of Louisiana's total take of pelts, 4,076,785 were muskrats.

Minnesota was in second place with a take of 1,067,704 fur animals, followed by Wisconsin with 1,559,207, North Dakota with 1,403,233, Michigan with 1,104,143 (a revised figure reported by the Michigan department of conservation), Maryland 800,000, and Pennsylvania 770,081.

Michigan's Take Included

Bobcats	1,061
Coyotes	2,110
Foxes	10,302
Mink	26,295
Muskrats	995,443
Opossums	10,368

THOMPSON — A lightning bolt striking an exhibition pund at the state fish hatchery here killed 12 brown trout, three brook trout, and one rainbow trout. All were adult fish, weighing from three to seven pounds.

LANSING—Deer with antlers may be hunted with bows and arrows in all southern Michigan counties next November 1 to 14 inclusive.

The conservation commission has approved an open season on deer in the southern part of the state as a control measure. The animals are increasing in several areas, notably in Livingston county, and are the cause of considerable scattered crop damage.

The conservation department recently reported that deer are present in every Michigan county.

The special bow and arrow season in Allegan county, first southern Michigan county to be opened for taking of deer with antlers, will continue from November 1 to 30 as in past years. The gun season, north of the Muskegon-Bay City line, will be from November 15 to 30, followed by a special gun season for antlerless deer in Allegan county from December 1 to 10.

LANSING—A bill to regulate boat liveries on Michigan lakes and streams may be presented to the next legislature with the backing of the Detroit Sportsmen's Congress. The conservation commission has promised assistance in drafting such a measure at the behest of Lloyd F. Eagan, president of the Detroit organization. The proposed measure would condemn unsafe boats and provide penalties for operators who permit overloading of rented craft.

AMERICAN YOUTH, TOO YOUNG TO SERVE ON FIGHTING FRONTS, HELP

CHICAGO — Contribution on the home-front to the winning of the war and the peace will be made this summer by American youth too young to serve on the fighting fronts through their efforts in nearly 3,000 camps, institutes and assemblies sponsored by the Protestant churches of the nation. Attendance in excess of 500,000 young people has been predicted by the Rev. Isaac K. Beckes, director of Young Peoples Work of the International Council of Religious Education.

Work projects, including aid to farmers in harvesting crops, in summer camps for the older group will take the place of former recreation programs, as an aid to the war effort. Manual labor of both boys and girls will be used in building needed community recreational projects for underprivileged children and in repairing and beautifying church buildings, as the work program in some camps.

More recreational centers, camps and vacation church schools for the younger children from 10 to 15 will be run by the churches this summer than ever before. The largest increase in attendance is expected in these intermediate or junior high programs. Many of the children will receive care and instruction that cannot now be provided by their mothers who are working in war industry.

LIFEGUARDS ON OTHER BEACHES

Stalwart young men who once held themselves in readiness to save lives at Michigan's state park beaches are now saving democracy on the beaches of Normandy, Italy, and the islands of the Pacific, and the conservation department has erected signs like the above, at Grand Haven state park, to warn bathers that they must look after their own safety. Information about air and water temperatures is a new service this season. Early season beach attendance figures are above last year's but fall far short of peacetime totals.

Religious education and religious inspiration will not be eliminated from the summer projects of the churches by the new type of work project and recreational features, but will be further emphasized in order to help maintain spiritual morale on the home front, Mr. Beckes believes.

"The service motive is uppermost in the planning of Christian summer programs this year," Mr. Beckes stated. "Youth agencies of the churches not only are trying to keep young people from being confused by the impact of the war emergency, but also are giving them tasks to accomplish which make a real home-front contribution."

FISHING GUIDE NOW AVAILABLE

"GOOD FISHING" in West Michigan" is the title of a new booklet announced for distribution by William Palmer, secretary-manager of the West Michigan Tourist and Resort Association. The text charts the lakes and streams of each of the 31 counties comprising the west half of the lower peninsula, giving the area of the lakes, how to reach them, if they have accommodations and boat liveries and the kind of fish in each. The booklet of 48 pages has been carefully prepared to give accurate information on all waters listed. This is a companion book to "Carefree Days" which contains the detailed map of all the important lakes and streams of west Michigan.

He was inthe charge of San Juan, and, of course, he was yelling. But while in Cuba he had energy left with which to write long letters home, telling what the Michigan boys were doing. The Grand Rapids Herald published every letter it could get, and young Knox began to think about a newspaper career.

"I'M CITY EDITOR!"

He finished at Alma, came to Grand Rapids, and asked E. D. Conger, then owner of The Herald, for a job in the editorial department. Conger thought he'd do better in the circulation department, but eventually Knox became a reporter, later city editor. He was a better city editor than a reporter, for even then he had executive ability, rather than writing ability.

His wife often recalled in later years the night he came to their boarding house here and, in that yelling voice, announced, "They've made me city editor!" That night, Mrs. Knox said, was the happiest in their early married life.

But Knox couldn't be completely happy working for someone else. He heard about a rundown weekly at Sault Ste. Marie which could be bought for $6,000. John A. Muehling, who died recently and who, in those days, was alderman from the fourth ward and operated a printing shop, put up $3,000. Knox got his $3,000 from Conger, and bought the Soo Journal. He and Muehling got a Mergenthaler press on credit, hired Frank M. Sparks, now editor of The Herald, for their managing editor, and went to town. It took time; it was hard sledding; they were all broke. Sparks recalled Friday that often he stopped by the cashier's cage to borrow a quarter for lunch.

AN "ANGEL"

But they yelled and fought. And now and then Chase S. Osborn would drop in, say, "I like your paper; send it to my aunt in Wisconsin for 10 years, and here's the money in advance." Everyone had lunch those days.

When the paper was made into a daily, Knox set about cleaning up the Soo. He did so well that a year after going to the Soo he was able to buy out the opposition, the News-Record. And how he yelled as he announced the coup to his fellow-workers! More campaigns. Knox exposed the Soo's political corruption, hammered the crooks out of office, sent one to prison.

Then he took up the campaign of Osborn for governor, got Osborn nominated and was himself made Republican state chairman at the state convention in Saginaw in 1910. Arthur H. Vandenburg, now senator, nominated him, calling him the "red-blooded, red-headed Frank Knox." There is a story that Vandenberg and Knox worked one day together on The Herald, but neither was ever certain about that in later years.

BACKER OF TEDDY

In 1912 Knox made several trips to Teddy Roosevelt at Oyster Bay, urging him to be a candidate for the presidency against Taft. And at the famous state convention in Bay City, when Roosevelt and Taft camps set up in the same armory and the national guard was on hand to try to keep order, Knox was there, yelling with the rest.

But when Roosevelt organized the Bull Moose party Knox was in hot water. However, he did what he could in a quiet way for him to further Roosevelt's lost cause. Old-timers recall that he came here in February, 1912, for a banquet. He was seated next to the late Senator William Alden Smith. On Smith's other side was Osborn, and all through the banquet Osborn and Knox argued about Teddy.

Eventually Knox sold his Soo paper to Osborn and he and Muehling bought the Union in Manchester, N. H. He frequently visited Michigan after that however, especially after buying the Chicago Daily News.

MILLION IN DEBT

One day Sparks asked him how he was doing on the News, and Knox replied with a carefree air: "I'm only a million in debt right now!"

He was in Grand Rapids in 1936 when he was Republican candidate for vice president, and returned here about three years ago for a brief visit with his sister, Miss Elizabeth Knox.

"There was a riot when Frank was appointed secretary of navy", Sparks recalled. "The New Dealers were horrified, and so were the hard-boiled Republicans, who thought he was betraying his party.

"He did no such thing. He simply put his country ahead of everything else."

And he never forgot his old friends. Once, during a political pow-wow in the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, he sighted Sparks on the outskirts of a group of big names.

"There's the old fellow, I want to see!" Knox yelled, and left the big names for a talk-session with Sparks.

"Please limit your call to 5 minutes"

FIRE LOSSES SHOW SABOTEUR FAILURE

YEAR'S INCREASE IN BLAZE DESTRUCTION CALLED "NOT ALARMING"

A communique from the home front this week reported enemy resistance stubborn, but progress satisfactory. It was signed by Commissioner Oscar G. Olander of the Michigan State Police.

The report concerned control of the No. 1 weapon of the enemy — fire. It showed that while Michigan's fire loss for the report period had increased, the gain was not in proportion to the increase in the country as a whole.

In the matter of both loss of life by fire and in fire destruction of rural property, there were decreases.

Statistics gathered by Arnold C. Renner, chief of the fire division of the state police, showed the fire loss of the nation had increased approximately $84,000,000 last year over the previous year. Yet the increase in Michigan, arsenal of a global war, where the saboteur's torch might break the fortunes of men at the front increased but $3,441,751.56.

The increase was "not alarming", therefore, in the opinion of Chief Renner, who points out that part of the increase can be attributed to "inexperienced help in our manufacturing plants, speeded-up war schedules, worn heating elements for which parts are not available and lack of sufficient help to maintain proper 'housekeeping conditions' in places where fire risks are great."

But 260 of a total of 46,825 fires were identified as "incendiary."

Fire loss in the rural, unprotected areas showed a decrease of $47,000 under that of the preceding year. The report showed there had been 129 deaths by fire during the year, a decrease of 54 from the year preceding. It is the second year in succession to show a drop in the number to lose their lives by fire.

Commenting on the rare instances where fires in war plants joined forces with the enemy in an offensive on supply lines to the fighting fronts, Mr. Renner said the two largest had been the Dow Chemical plant at Marysville, and the Machine Company at Ecorse, each loss exceeding $400,000.

In a tabulation of fire causes, Renner said the conclusion could be drawn that "folks just won't learn" for among the leading causes are the old stand-bys — careless smoking, children playing with and careless use of matches, and kindling fires with kerosene overheated stoves and furnaces and gasoline. Nearly 7,000 fires originated from these four causes.

Other reliable ways of calling out the fire department haven't been forgotten, Renner says. He cites such causes as thawing out frozen pipes with paper torches, careless disposal of hot ashes and leaving the electric iron on while Mrs. Housewife goes down town to shop.

organization which at first arranged lunches and reading material for servicemen from Charlevoix county, its expenses have risen accordingly. At the present time it numbers among its activities Courier subscriptions to all Charlevoix men and women in the service, transportation for servicemen and inductees from other parts of the county when necessary, hospital boxes to men and women who are confined to hospitals here and overseas, lodging and meals for inductees from out of the way places who can not make other arrangements, and lunches and reading matter for inductees leaving from here. Recently the organization presented Certificates of Recognition to all Charlevoix men and women in the service as a small token of the appreciation for what they are doing for the people of Charlevoix.

The Courier fund alone will cost the CSO considerably more than last year. With more casualties being reported there will be call for more hospital boxes.

The CSO committee composed of representatives from local churches, lodges, clubs and organizations needs your support and financial assistance to carry on its work for your servicemen and women. So when you are asked on Saturday to give, be generous with your donation. Remember, it is for YOUR boy or girl in the service.

HARVEST FOR SEED LEGUME FORAGES

To insure seed supplies, at least for their own use in 1945, Michigan farmers are urged to harvest for seed this year all available acreages of the common legume forages. Legume seed harvest for the last three years has not been sufficient to supply the state's needs.

Present indications are that there will be a fair set of seed of alfalfa and alsike clover. Care should be taken to harvest this seed with as little waste as possible.

Before cutting for seed, it is advisable to rogue out weeds such as dock and catchfly. Stray sweet clover plants in alfalfa, alsike and red clover fields should also be removed in order to produce a high quality product.

The legume seed crop is worthy of special attention during harvesting. Where possible, the cut portion should be stacked or stored under cover until it can be hulled.

MAKE PLANS NOW FOR FALL GARDEN

If the Victory gardener seeks variety in his summer job of combating weeds and insects and hoping for rain, let him plant a fall garden, suggests Keith C. Barrons, associate professor of horticulture, Michigan State College.

For best results, fall garden planting should be done by the first week of August in the upper peninsula and by August 15 in the lower peninsula. Crops that are especially adapted for summer planting, to be harvested in the fall, are radishes, leaf lettuce, spinach, kohl-rabi, mustard, and turnips. If desired, beets may be sown to be harvested for their green tops.

Some of these crops are fairly frost-resistant and may be harvested until late in the fall. As an extreme case, that of spinach has been harvested on the College farm regularly in December. If the crop is raised on a well-drained sandy soil, it is possible to winter-over spinach satisfactorily.

If the soil is so dry that there is doubt that the seed will germinate, make the required number of furrows in the usual way and then soaking the soil in the furrow before sowing the seed. His method is to tie a rug over the nozzle of the hose and place the hose where the water is required. After the water has soaked down into the soil somewhat, then he proceeds to plant.

To give the fall garden crops a boost, add a Victory garden type fertilizer, even though the ground has received an application earlier in the season.

They Are Buying War Bonds —Are You?

This is Seaman 1/c Molachi H. Rich, of Quitman, Georgia. He is only 18 but a veteran of action in the Mediterranean. The destroyer escort on which he served was torpedoed and he was hit in the spine. For weeks he could not move his feet but now can move one foot pretty well. Four buddies are in the hospital. They were all rescued by a sister ship.

The going is tough in the jungles of Rendova. Marine Pfc. David Phelps of Bridgeport, Conn., was thrown from a reconnaissance car and received a fracture of both legs. But he's doing all right as you see here. Phelps is twenty-two.

A smile no Nazi torpedo can wipe off. Marion Porter, Steward 3/c, who hails from Spartanburg, S. C., was in the water three hours after his ship was torpedoed in the Mediterranean. A 20 mm shell case was thrown against his leg when the tin fish hit and fractured it badly. Now he is waiting for his injury to heal so that he can get another crack at the Axis.

Markland's description of Osborn as "the friendliest of men, yet he loves a fight; a true democrat, devoted to liberty, yet he is by instinct an absolute monarch; despite the force of his character, aggressiveness, his neighbors know him as an incurable sentimentalist."

Chase Osborn at 84 is less vigorous than usual now. He apologizes that he is "blind and paralysed," but nevertheless, he sees more, travels more, thinks more, writes more, knows more than many a man in the prime, and with all faculties unimpaired. To Chase, long life and happiness!

Here and there. The "wackiest town in the world" is Colon, Michigan, down in St. Joseph county. Colon is the home of the Percy Abbott company which manufactures gadgets for magicians. People have their heads or arms cut off, they are sawn in two, dismembered — yet they walk away unharmed.

Harry Tresize, publisher of the Wakefield News, up near Ironwood, has four sons in the military service. John R. Dethmers, Holland, former assistant attorney general and now chairman of the Republican state central committee, appears to have the green light for the GOP nomination of attorney general. The state convention is July 31 - Aug. 1.

Percy Grnioger, noted artist, was a guest of the National Camp Music at Interlochen this month. The Wayne county home rule amendment to the state constitution will appear on Nov. 7 ballot; the Flint amendments, for diversion of sales tax revenue to local governments, failed to receive sufficient signatures.

Wednesday, July 26, was the 25th anniversary of Oscar Olander with the State Police. The organization was created April 10, 1917 with Col. Roy C. Vandercook as its commanding officer by assignment from the Michigan War Preparedness Board. It was a war-time emergency. Michigan State college loaned property for state headquarters.

During Commissioner Olander's service, the State Police have acquired a national reputation for efficiency. Political interference is non-existent. Posts are housed in permanent buildings. Equipment is modern. Michigan takes great pride in the Michigan State Police — and Commissioner Olander.

The State Bar of Michigan professional organization for attorneys, has been widely commended by state officials, state legislators and newspaper editors for its re-affirmation of ethics whereby lawyer-members of the State Legislature are restrained from accepting fees from persons or groups having special interest in legislative actions.

There have been rumors at Lansing, some of which were linked to the grand jury investigations, that lawyer-members had accepted fees from regular clients who were affected currently by pending legislation. The action by the State Bar's committee on ethics makes it clear that such a practice has been, and is now, considered to be unethical. Like Caesar's wife, lawyer-legislators should be above suspicion.

Actually, it is understood that the re-affirmation has been considered for nearly one year and was not prompted by any investigations into alleged legislative graft at Lansing.

Associate Justice Frank Murphy of the United States Supreme court prefers the rough and tumble of practical politics to the cloister of the bench. Latest evidence comes from Mrs. Van Auken, Detroit democratic national committeewoman, who reports that Justice Murphy desired nomination for vice-president . . . More camps for German war prisoners are being established this summer in Michigan. Escape of several Nazis is giving the army a problem.

Detroit, the world's automobile town, is the oldest city west of the original seaboard colonies, having celebrated its 137th birthday before Chicago received its first charter . . . The 176 posts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Michigan are cooperating closely with the newly-created State Office of Veteran Affairs at Lansing. Arthur W. Thomas is the state adjutant with offices in Detroit.

Newspaper publishers will honor the memory of the late W. Frank Knox, wartime secretary of the navy, at a dinner Friday, Aug. 4, at Sault Ste Marie. Knox's newspaper associate at the Soo, where he owned the Evening News was Frank Sparks, editor of the Grand Rapids Herald, who will give the address Aug. 1. Knox served as president of the Michigan Press Association in 1904.

Broil These DeLuxe Hamburgers

Looking for a recipe to keep cool? Just pop all your supper foods into the broiler. It will cook them quickly, save fuel, and keep cook and kitchen cool during warmer days.

It's a good idea to serve broiler meals in the gay informality of the porch or garden. Give the family a real picnic, minus the sand and mosquitoes, of course.

Cooking in the broiler gives that grand outdoor flavor much like the foods cooked over open fires of the beach or woods. Broiler cooking, however, is much simpler. To do it, just light the flame and set the temperature controls at 350° F. Best results are obtained when this temperature is maintained throughout the whole broiling period.

"Bottled" and "tank" gases provide regular gas service in farm and suburban areas where city gas mains do not reach. These liquefied petroleum gases make possible the clean, hot flame so desirable for broiling. Broiled foods are not only more appetizing, but easily digested.

Here is a good porch-picnic supper menu, with all foods except dessert prepared in the broiler unit. Broil hamburgers first, and when they are almost done, pop in halved fresh tomatoes sprinkled with salt and pepper and buttered crumbs. Broil for about 10 minutes. During the last 5 minutes, toast split, buttered buns and heat the potato chips. Serve with cole slaw salad. Fresh strawberries and cream is the dessert suggestion.

DeLuxe Hamburgers.
(Serves 6)

1 pound ground beef
1 egg
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon minced onion
¼ cup catsup
1 cup sliced onion
8 slices bacon

Combine meat, egg, seasonings, and catsup; mix well. Form into thin patties. Brown sliced onion in hot fat. Put meat patties together, sandwich fashion, with sliced onion in between. Press edges together; wrap with a bacon slice and fasten with toothpick. Place patties on broiler rack 3-5 inches from heat. Broil 7 minutes on each side.

Of the 2,037,858 electric irons already authorized for civilian production, about 99 per cent will be household models, mostly automatic, and the remainder, commercial models, WPB says. The irons will not be rationed and some of them are expected to be available in the fall.

OPA Reduces Oats Ceilings

An average reduction of five cents a bushel in the ceiling prices of oats has been announced by OPA. New base prices at terminal base points range from 71 cents at Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Ore., to 83½ cents at Philadelphia, Pa. OPA says the new prices will reflect parity to producing farmers during the current crop year.

New Non-Highway Gas Coupons

New, non-highway, serially numbered gasoline coupons, E-2 and R-2, are now being issued in strips to farmers and other non-highway users, OPA has announced. The new coupons will be good concurrently with the E-1 and R-1 coupons now in circulation. The five-gallon R-2 coupons are printed in blue ink, and the one-gallon E-2 coupons, in black ink. While neither of the new coupons is good for highway use, the E-2 specifically carries the legend — "Not good for obtaining gasoline to propel registered vehicle."

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

It Pays to Cull Early

Why do poultrymen keep hens in the poultry flock after they quit laying? At this time of year when they stop laying they usually stay out of production for at least four or five months. When the laying flock is culled egg production is not injured. The flock produces just as much income as before but the feed bill is less.

It is a well-known fact that the poultry population at the present time is large. Many people intend to cull their poultry flocks but they will wait until October or November to do so. The former who culls his non-producers during summer and early fall has a much better chance of selling them to good advantage. All poultrymen should sell all early moulters, broody birds and culls immediately. During the months of July and August a 50% egg production should be maintained. This can be done by culling now. It will save much feed. At the present time, poultrymen face a feed shortage of 10 million tons because more feed was used this last winter than was expected. By culling out the non-producers now, feed is conserved and the flock returns a greater profit to the owner.

The next four months is the season of the year when egg production gradually decreases until the birds quit altogether during the moulting season. The inferior birds moult first, hence the rule often quoted "The early moulter is always a cull." The more proficient producers keep on laying until late in the fall. The only birds that can justify the daily feed and care are those that are laying 50% production during the months of June, July and August.

Corn Borer Increasing in Number, Considerable Damage Expected on Many Farms

The European Corn Borer is on the increase in Charlevoix County. Last week two well-developed fields of corn were examined, and it was found that considerable damage will be done before harvest. In several stalks four or five borers were at work. Authorities at the Michigan State College say that a stalk of corn can stand two or three borers without becoming seriously damaged, but when the number exceeds this average, it means trouble.

The corn borer spends the winter in corn stalks. In the spring, the adult moth emerges and starts laying eggs. No practical method has been designed for killing the adult moth. It is possible to dust with good control, but under ordinary field conditions it is almost impossible to dust large acreages due to the great expense incurred as well as the time element.

For the home garden in the case of sweet corn, four or five applications of a Rotenone, fixed nicotine and nicotine-bentonite dust will control the corn borer if applied thoroughly enough to get the material into the growing whorl of the plant. The best control that can be recommended is to cut the corn low — four inches or less, ensile or shred the fodder and then plow under all stubble cleanly.

This article is not written to cause too much alarm on the part of farmers, but to put them on the alert and to have them observe their fields frequently. Where corn is to be put in the silo, it probably would be well to put it in early, as a strong wind will blow the corn down if the borers have been plentiful in the field. The big hope is a good clennup before winter sets in.

A New Bread for Lunch Boxes

IN a countless number of homes, packing lunch boxes is just part of the day's routine. These days, it is not enough for a homemaker to serve attractive and nutritious meals at her own table—she must also think of the members of her family who take their lunches with them.

Possibly, there is no device that gives such interesting variations to sandwiches as different types of bread—but a homemade bread is really tops in delicious flavor that bespeaks as well as words, the fact that love and care have gone into the preparation of each sandwich.

There is a new Raisin Bran now on the market that has made bread-making a real cinch. It is easy to make and each slice of this golden brown loaf is a treat for the most discriminating taste. When even the simplest type of filling is used with this bread — the result is a really important sandwich. And in addition to its delightful taste, it is well-fortified with Vitamin B_1—an item that all well-bred lunch boxes should contain.

Try this recipe soon and we feel sure that it will become a reigning favorite with your family.

Raisin Bran Bread

2 cups sifted flour	¼ cup milk
2 teaspoons baking powder	3 tablespoons molasses
½ teaspoon salt	3 tablespoons melted butter or other shortening
¼ cup sugar
1 cup Raisin Bran
1 egg, well beaten

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder, salt, and sugar, and sift again. Add bran and mix. Combine egg, milk, molasses, and shortening. Add to flour mixture, beating only enough to dampen all flour. Bake in greased loaf pan, 9 x 5 x 3 inches, in moderate oven (350°F.) 1 hour, or until done. Cool. Wrap in damp cloth and store several hours or over-night before slicing.

USE ENOUGH WATER WHEN IRRIGATING

Sprinkling the vegetable garden for a short time every evening or so may provide recreation for the gardener but it does more harm than good to the growing crops.

Such watering merely wets the surface of the ground, causing subsequent harm to the plants by inducing the development of a shallow root system.

If the gardener deems it necessary to supplement rainfall, not less than the equivalent of one inch of rain should be applied each time, preferably with a rotating-type sprinkler.

The simplest way to learn if one has applied sufficient water is to place several shallow flat pans, such as pie tins, in the area covered by the sprinkler. It is possible then to estimate the amount of water applied by its depth in the pans.

A victory garden 30 by 50 feet in size would require irrigation for about five hours with the sprinkler delivering three gallons per minute.

Even though one measures how much water is being applied per minute, sudden increase in use elsewhere will cause the pressure to decrease, necessitating a longer sprinkling period.

Watering is best done in the evening or after the hottest part of the day because of excessive loss of moisture due to evaporation.

Honey Production Lag Predicted

Michigan's honey production for 1944 is expected to be less than the annual average of 12 to 15 million pounds.

Exact estimates of the year's production will be compiled following regional meetings of beekeepers to be held in August. These meetings, scheduled for 10 a. m., are to be held at Sylvania, Ohio, August 2; Ithaca, August 3; Traverse City, August 4; and Burt Lake State Park, Indian River, August 5.

Office supplies of any description may be obtained quickly through the Charlevoix Courier.

PICKLE NEWS

H. J. Heinz Company
Charlevoix, Mich.

Begin picking as soon as cucumbers form, and pick down to smallest fruits that have spent their blossoms. The cleaner the picking, and the fewer large cucumbers produced, the heavier the vines bear. Ordinarily three pickings a week will be sufficient, depending on the weather, if the pickings are done thoroughly. Deliver cucumbers as soon after picking as possible because they lose weight and deteriorate rapidly. Handle cucumbers very carefully to avoid scratching and bruising.

Fixing Up the Farm

by BURTON WILLIAMS

Simple Range Shelter

THIS is the year to make every piece of equipment that we now have on the farm keep going, every acre and cow and hen produce its best, every day and every lick count.

Our fighting men need plenty of food, and we must produce it. One soldier, for instance, needs enough meat to equal 500 pounds of broilers each year. That means that more broilers are going to have to come off the farm than ever before.

Now that the broiler raising season is getting into full swing, many farmers are faced with the problem of providing range shelter for flocks. Illustrated below is a cheap range shelter for 6-week-old broilers, which helps the flock get green feed and gives them elbow room.

The shelter is simply constructed and requires a minimum of labor and critical materials. It is made of asbestos cement board applied on a V-shaped frame, with wire stretched across the open ends. A small door covered with wire is used on the front. Since asbestos board is rodent-proof and weather-proof, the shelter will last a long time.

"...and I often think of Elm Street"

"... I'm a long way from home out here, and when I'm alone at night, Dad, I often think of Elm Street with its big trees, its neat houses, the bells on a quiet Sunday morning—and all of us coming in town for church. It's the peace and freedom and decency of it all that gets under my skin—and it makes me a bit homesick now and then.

"There's nothing like Elm Street over here—and never will be till these folks change their system.

"The trouble lies with the men who rule—and with the people who let them get away with it.

"Over here the wrong men have been running things too long. They have been crazy with power. They gradually took over more and more, and when the people finally woke up—it was too late. These folks can't throw out their officials the way we can. They have to have a war to get rid of their so-called 'new order.'

"Thank God we can still put the men we want into office—and throw them out again—with ballots instead of bullets.

"This mess is a fine example of what dictatorship and regimentation can do when they really get going. And talk about bureaucrats—you ought to see what the ones over here are doing to farmers. You can't do anything on your own. You just take orders—and like it.

"We ordinary folks at home always had a feeling of independence and self respect. You and Mom were always looking ahead to better things—for yourselves and for us kids. That sort of thing is missing here, Dad—and I think it's the result of years of being pushed around. These folks have been told what to do and when and how to do it for so long that they don't know anything else. They've forgotten how to think for themselves.

"Don't let this system get a toe hold at home, Dad. It's bad stuff. And the trouble is, it sneaks up on you. You don't realize that it's got you till it's almost too late.

"I think most American farmers are just like us—plain, practical, hard working, thrifty people—blessed with a lot of good common sense. Most of us aren't very strong for fancy political theories. We know by experience that the American way of getting things done, even with its short-comings, has brought more real happiness, prosperity, progress, education, health and general good to more people than any other system in the world.

"And that's something to think about . . ."

Millions of American boys from farms and villages are doing a lot of thinking. They are writing home anxiously these days. Many of them are worried—wondering what is happening to America while they are away. They realize now, more than ever, what real freedom means—and we at home must guard it for them as well as for ourselves.

MICHIGAN DAIRY HERDS SET RECORD

Michigan's 11,804 cows enrolled in 48 dairy herd improvement associations during 1943 set a new record for pounds of milk and butterfat produced and net return to owners. They averaged 8,433 pounds of milk and 350 pounds of fat, and returned to their owners $136 over the cost of feed.

The records reveal forcefully the need for removing the low-producing cows during this period of high feed costs, thus emphasizing higher yield per cow rather than the milking of more cows. The best evidence of the value of records in dairy production is shown by the cows yielding 250 pounds of butterfat at a feed cost of $81, compared with the cows producing 350 pounds of fat at a feed cost of $89. While the feed cost difference is $8, the returns over feed cost between the two groups were $87 and $139, respectively, or a difference of $52 extra for $8 additional feed.

Michigan started the national movement of group testing of dairy cows when the first cow testing association was established in Newaygo county in 1905.

DRY CORN TO GET VARIETY IN MEALS

Liven up meals and bring back memories of old-time days next winter by serving dried corn prepared this summer.

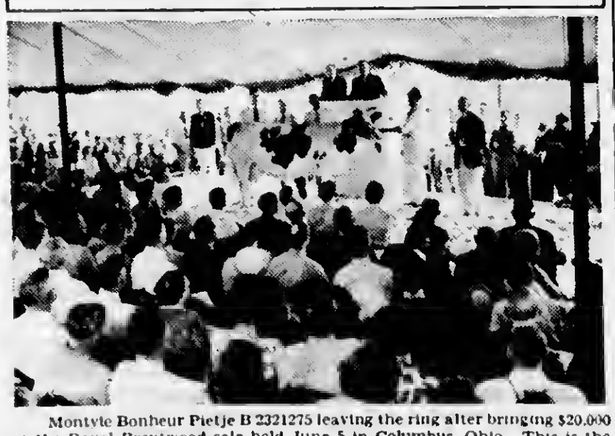
Drying is a safe and sure method of preserving corn when no pressure cooker is available, although it is not practical except for comparatively small quantities. The chief advantage of dried corn is in the novelty of the product.

Any variety of good sweet corn may be used. Gather it in the milk stage but only in small quantities that can be prepared at once. Husk the ears and remove any worm injuries. Dip in hot water from 10 to 15 minutes, to "set" the milk. Young corn will require all of 15 minutes, while older corn will need only 10 or 12 minutes. Then drain, cool, and cut the grains from the ears. Spread from ½ to ¾ inch deep on trays and dry at a temperature of 130 to 140 degrees F. in the oven. Stir the kernels during drying to break up masses and to insure even drying. When sufficiently dried, the grains will be hard and will break with a clean, glass-like fracture.

It is important that the temperature be maintained from 130 to 140 degrees. That is slightly warmer atmosphere than one would care to keep his hands in for any length of time. To regulate the temperature, leave the electric oven door open about ½ inch and a gas oven door open about 8 inches. In the case of ovens in wood or coal-burning stoves it will be necessary for the housewife to determine by experiment how to regulate the temperature.

After the pans are removed from the oven, the corn should be left to dry further for several hours on the kitchen table before being put in storage containers. The grains should be stirred occasionally during this time to insure thorough drying. The corn should be stored in tin cans with close-fitting tops or in old glass fruit jars that can no longer be sealed tightly enough for ordinary canning.

COW SELLS FOR $20,000



Montvie Bonheur Pietje B 2321275 leaving the ring after bringing $20,000 at the Royal Brentwood sale held June 5 in Columbus, Ohio. This is the highest price paid for a Holstein cow at public auction since 1920 and the highest price for a female of any dairy breed for many years. "Pietje B" has been officially classified "excellent" in type, which is the highest score an animal can receive, and holds the Michigan state fat record for her age and milking classification with the production of 964.2 lbs. fat from 19,170 lbs. 5% milk made at 5½ years. She was consigned by Creston Farms, Comstock Park, Mich., and purchased by Glenn L. Bancroft, Flint, Mich. Buyers from 15 states purchased 79 head of Holsteins at the Royal Brentwood for an average price of $1392 per head. The event was the 16th in the series held at the same time as the annual delegate meeting of The Holstein-Friesian Association of America.

NEWS FROM CAMP CHARLEVOIX

Through the courtesy of the Charlevoix Yacht Club, the boys at Camp Charlevoix were taken into town Sunday morning by boat to attend church services. The boys returned to camp by boat after the services, which were held in the Congregational and Catholic churches. Clair Webster, of the Yacht Club, was in charge of arrangements for the trip. Those who furnished boats were Louis Wallace, Clarence Wood, Charles Durrr, Charles Bellinger and Clair Webster.

Bad weather prevented the water carnival from being held last Saturday. The carnival will be held this Saturday afternoon beginning at 2:30. Included in the events will be a 25-yard free style race against time and competition. Five teams are entered in the intermediate class in this race. The second race will be a 25-yard free style event by members of the swim classes. The third race will consist of three teams in the intermediate group in a 50-yard free style event. Relay races will be held between Green and Grey teams in the junior, intermedinte and advanced swimming groups. Open events for the swimming classes will be held in back style and butterfly strokes. Interspersed between the swimming events will be several boating events. These will include in-and-out canoe races, canoe races without paddles, and canoe bobbing and tilting.

Athletics during the past week found Angell's team still holding top place in league by defeating Snyder's team 16-6. Angell pitched and Roberts caught for the winners. Green pitched and Hobbs caught for the losers. In basketball Angell's team defeated McDonald's team 24-16. In another baseball contest Ewbank's team defeated Noel's team 6-5. Ewbank pitched for the winners, Means caught the game. Snyder's team defeated Tomlinson's team 12-6. Dresser pitched for the winners and Hobbs caught. Bachman pitched and Abel and Matter caught for the losers.

VETERANS GET TRAINING FOR POST-WAR JOBS

need to have this training geared to their physical and nervous condition. Some may be able to take training only an hour a day when they first come to camp. The instruction will be increased as their health improves and they are able to take it. Vocational-technical instruction at Pine Lake Camp will be individualized, and will not conform to any rigid course regulations, or set periods for starting and terminating courses."

The camp is being equipped to offer training in the following fields: Machine shop, boat building, cabinet making, arc welding, acetylene welding, radio service, machine drafting, office practice, bookkeeping, watch and clock repair, commercial cooking, landscaping, and sheetmetal work. These courses will be given as needed and the curriculum can be changed to meet changing needs. Instructors all will be persons certificated by the State Board of Control for Vocational Education and the training will meet the standards of all vocational schools and courses in the state.

Because the rehabilitation of the disabled is to be given great attention, the services of a physician, psychiatrist, and nurse are available. When appliances are needed in order to fit a veteran for employment, these can be furnished if there are no other financial resources. Maintenance, laundry and training are free. The only expense to the veterans who are accepted for training are their own personal expenses and these can be very slight since the camp is situated outside any metropolitan area, and is self-sufficient. Facilities include a well furnished lounge, dining hall, library, and classrooms in the main building. Sleeping quarters are in log cabins adjacent to the administration building, and all front on the lake. A building to house the training shops is in course of construction. There are 500 lake acres and 31 land acres included in the camp site and the waterfront is equipped with two wooden docks, a diving raft, boats and canoes. There also are archery, ping pong, and small game equipment.

Veterans of Charlevoix county who are interested in this plan should communicate with the district supervisor of the Rehabilitation Division of the State Board of Control for Vocational Education, William Anderson, Central Hotel Building, P. O. Box 336, Gaylord, Michigan.

Editorial Comment on GOV.'s CONFERENCE

plants and hundreds of employees. To cut production would have been suicide. Washington administrators might have foreseen the danger, but government regulatory controls were against their cardinal principle of laissez-faire, of "rugged individualism."

1929 brought the worst depression this country or the world had ever seen. Few could deny that business's headlong plunge into enormous production, disregarding altogether one of the basic concepts for economic stability—buying power among the people equal to the amount of goods produced in factories and on farms—, was the major cause although not the only cause of that depression.

When the boys come home from overseas, the productive capacity of industry will be greater than it has ever been in the history of our country. We are supposed to profit by experience, and we've already had one disastrous experience allowing industry to "run the show." Only organized planning can place eight million war veterans in gainful occupations, can reconvert industries without drastic dislocation.

Things don't just happen anymore. The age of miracles is gone, and if we are to avert mass unemployment and economic chaos after this war, we had better start thinking about ways and means right now. "We" means all the people of this nation who make themselves heard through their government. Let us make sure that those we elect speak for us and then trust them to carry out the job.

GREAT LAKES PASSAGE, WRITTEN BY JOHN E. BOICE

In the August issue of Yachting Magazine is an interesting article, Great Lakes Passage, written by John E. Boice, part owner and crew member of the auxiliary cutter, 'South Wind,' which was the first pleasure boat to enter the harbor this year. The boat was taken from Holland to her home port of Toledo and tells of the 751 miles of travel between the two points.

Of Charlevoix and Beaver Island he writes: After this perfect day of sailing (from Frankfurt) and after all the beauty we had seen, it was fitting that the supremely beautiful harbor of Charlevoix was our haven for the night. As we powered through the swing bridge, the harbormaster stood on the pier awaiting us and, as we coasted past, he welcomed us most cordially, directed us to a fine array of docks that fronted upon the clean and attractive city park, and then met us there to assist us with out dock lines. Joe Howard by name, he informed us that we were the first yacht to visit Charlevoix for the 1944 season. Later we wrote our names and that of the 'South Wind' on the top line of the Record Book for visitors.

While we regretted leaving this yachtsman's paradise the next day, we had to take advantage of the favorable southerly wind that was still blowing. We cast off our lines, treated ourselves to a short cruise into the inland waters of Lake Charlevoix, and then headed for Lake Michigan for the final northerly leg to Mackinac Island. From Charlevoix we set our course for the next navagational marker, namely the Dahlia Shoals black can buoy far out of sight of any land and 26 miles away. With this distance to cover at our speed of six miles, we had plenty of time to recall some of the historic tales related to us by Mr. Howard regarding the waters and islands ahead of us.

On Beaver Island, just over the horizon to the west, back in the 1850's there had been plenty of activity. It had been the lair of pirates who used to raid the old-time, wood-burning passenger steamers and sailing vessels that ventured too near the Beaver. Thousands of immigrants who had come west on these vessels became easy prey. For years Beaver Island was feared and hated.

Back in these old times, Beaver Island had two notorious characters. The more renowned was the famous red-headed King Strang, who lived here with his wives and ruled his Mormon clan with an iron hand. The second was the hale and hearty Charlie Allers, an atheist, a rabid Mormon foe and a fellow who took personal pride in being regarded as the "Most swearingest man on the entire Great Lakes." He irritated his religious neighbor King Strang constantly and, to relieve his ire, King Strang fired his cannon every day in the general direction of Charlie's cabin on Whiskey Point just across the intervening Bay.

Charlevoix Soldier Writes of London

A letter from S/Sgt. Keith Wagner who is stationed somewhere in England, gives his impressions of "London." I have had occasion to pay a short visit to London some time ago and if for no other reason, I'll always be thankful I had an opportunity to come to England. You get quite a different slant on things when you stand in front of such mighty edifices as Buckingham Palace at the end of the Mall and although the regular occupant was absent that day we felt we were welcome. I wandered through Whitehall past the seats of the mighty, gazed at Parliament across the historic Thames and even set my clock by Big Ben. I walked all the way around Piccadilly Circus and saw the Bovril sign in Trafalgar Square, the one you always see in the newsreel. Westminster Abbey is breath-taking to say the least and you can realize how mere age can denote more significance than mere architectural grandeur. To me a simple thatched roof cottage here holds more to the achievement of the artisan than does the Empire State building. They have been here hundreds of years and are good for hundreds more.

The English may be slower than we are at home but when they know what they want, they really go ahead and get it. And they have it for a long time.

I'm glad I had the chance to go to London, because I never would have had the opportunity to see all I did if I hadn't. It sure was nice and I'll always remember it. But just between you and me, I'll take little old Charlevoix anytime.

Coast Guards Do Their Job Well

By John G. Cole, U.S.C.G.R.
Coast Guard Correspondent

ON THE SAIPAN BEACHHEAD (Delayed) — Perhaps the Coast Guard is better known than most people believe. One of the Coast Guard photographers is inclined to think so after an incident which occurred during the third day of fighting for the Island of Saipan.

After covering the landing and the beachhead photographically, he decided to move on up to the front lines for some general action shots. He made his way up the hills about two miles.

Enemy mortar shells were beginning to lob over his head. Jap snipers were scattered through the high cane fields. About fifty yards from the firing line he was stopped by a Marine sergeant.

"Hey, wait a second, bud," barked the Marine. "What outfit are you with?"

"The Coast Guard," replied the photographer.

The Marine looked at him for a long second and then said, "I knew you guys were out here in the Pacific, but I didn't think you drove those landing barges THIS far inshore!"

They Died to Make Them Free

One poignant picture made by an Army Signal Corps photographer shows a kneeling Roman mother and her child gently and reverently placing flowers over the still forms of two American boys who paid the supreme price to liberate them from the Nazi and Fascist grip. Look at their faces and you will see that both mother and child realize that these Americans died for them.

POST OFFICE NEEDS OUR COOPERATION

The greatest boon to prompt mail handling has been the Postal Unit Numbering System, which was inaugurated in 122 large cities about 15 months ago to offset the loss of experienced mail clerks to the armed services. Addressing mail to these cities with the zone number after the name of the city, identifying the unit effecting delivery, has most successfully provided an opportunity to use inexperienced help on a part time basis. Currently a good share of available help is school youngsters, working only a few hours each day or every other day in order that school work may also be kept up.

Thus far a fine response has been shown by the mailing public in adopting the numbering system. Without it and this cooperation serious mail delays would be common and prompt handling extraordinary. While good results have been achieved, there are still many mailers who fail to address mail in this manner. This has been especially noted with respect to mail sent by people residing in cities where the numbering system has not been instituted, to correspondents living in those that have."

There are six cities in Michigan to which mail matter should be so addressed, namely, Flint, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo Lansing and Pontiac. If your friends reside in these cities, ask them for their delivery zone number, jot it down and always use it when addressing mail to them. Postmaster J. M. Foster will be glad to tell you the name of other cities in the United States to which mail should be so addressed. Persons having lists of addresses in these cities should submit them to the Postmasters concerned to be keyed to show zone numbers.

The mailing period to the armed forces overseas is September 15 to October 15.

Do your part, plan now to prepare and address mail correctly and also be ready to mail early.

A Pretty Picture

Everything was calm and peaceful on Bernie Ward's cabin cruiser last Thursday and the party was enjoying one of those restful cruises at trolling speed until a 13-pound lake trout smacked one of the spoons — then things began to happen!

How this denizen of the deep knew that attractive Mrs. Marcus Rice of Ladue, Mo., was on the other end of several hundred feet of trolling wire we won't hazard a guess, but the poor fish probably figured if the tantalizing bait wasn't something good to eat, at least he would have a chance to live and fight another day. Right there he made the last mistake of his life. Unaided, except for meaningless shouts of advice from her fellow passengers, Mrs. Rice brought to gaff the prize pictured above.

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

Mrs. Harry Gebeau entertained with a party on the lawn of her home on Thursday afternoon honoring the first birthday anniversary of Norman Usher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ken Usher, of Petoskey. Refreshments including ice cream and a lighted birthday cake were served at a table decorated with favors. The little guests who were accompanied by their mothers were: Bobby Marshall, Linda Zavitz, Stephen Wells, Diane Spayde, and Vickie Alice Racignol.

LEO CLOSE GETS COPIES OF NEW BOOKLET

Leo Close, county school commissioner, has just received 50 copies of a 1944 textbook, "Health and First Aid". These can be used by rural teachers as a source book to supplement health teaching or as a reference book by pupils.

The first part gives practical and useful knowledge concerning health and personal hygiene.

Part Two of the book is devoted entirely to first aid and accident prevention. Techniques described are those well recognized by the medical professiont, except that the very newest material developed from the experience of World War II has been included.

An attractive, colorful thirty-two page supplement between the two parts provides interest as well as education about tuberculosis. Girls will chuckle over the "Lady, Look Out Below" in the Posture section as well as learn the importance of posture to good health. Plentiful illustrations show how the body fight tuberculosis, how to kill germs, why the lungs need rest and how they get it, and how the school helps fight tuberculosis.

Tuberculosis Christmas Seals bring this book to the rural schools free of charge. It is the hope of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association that this book will bring better health and physical fitness to all.

Donna Jean DeYoung Killed By Truck

Donna Jean DeYoung, 19 month old daughter of private first class and Mrs. Cornelius DeYoung, died at the Charlevoix hospital, shortly before midnight Saturday, from injuries received Saturday afternoon when she was struck by a motor freight truck in the yard of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dickie, at 100 West Garfield avenue.

The child and her mother had been making their home with Mrs. DeYoung's parents, while Pfc. DeYoung is in the service.

The accident occurred about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon when the child ran out to see the truck, which was backing into the yard, to discharge a load of freight. She was struck by the truck's rear ruck, although the driver, Alfred James Lannin, of Traverse City, stopped immediately.

Born in Grand Rapids on January 13, 1943, she and her mother have made their home here since April of that year.

Surviving besides her mother and father who is overseas, are her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Dickie, and her paternal grandmother, Mrs. Carnelius DeYoung, Sr., of Grand Rapids.

The fund has received generous support from both summer and local residents, and this support was gratefully acknowledged.

The officers and directors were agreeable to extending the scope of the fund, if necessary, to meet any local needs. It is hoped that Charlevoix citizens will call any cases to the attention of the local committee, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ranger, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Meyer and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bridge.

FALL TO START MILKWEED POD COLLECTION

Milo Ernst, Petoskey, Michigan, has recently been called upon to serve as district supervisor of the milkweed pod collecting program of War Hemp Industries, Inc. He will, with the assistance of the county agricultural agents, county school commissioners, county war board chairmen, Scout leaders and others, arrange for the collection of milkweed pods. During the coming fall, the U. S. Government has requested for manufacture of life jackets for the Army and Navy 1,600,000 pounds of floss, which will require 2,250,000 50-lb. onion bags full of pods. The school children will collect possibly 95% of all the milkweed pods that are collected. Last year they did splendidly in a program that was a little delayed in getting underway. However, this season, with an ample supply of empty bags available before school begins and all necessary organizational details well in hand, the program of harvesting can be considered as "in the bag" so as to speak.

It requires the floss from two bags of pods to make one life jacket. With so few American homes not having contributed men and women to the task of an early Victory and lasting peace, every school-age youngster should feel a personal responsibility for collecting at least enough pods to make one life jacket and as many more as it is possible to get.

There will be buying stations conveniently situated throughout the county and the locations will be announced later. It will be possible to sell the freshly picked pods for 15 cents an onion bag full; or if the bags of freshly picked pods have been hung on fences in bright sunlight for a long enough time to become "crackly" dry, they will then be worth 20 cents a bag. You can not collect too many bags of pods.

Please address all inquiries on the program either for bags or information to the district supervisor or inquire of your county agricultural agent, 4-H Club leader, school teacher, or county war board chairmen.

STATE TO FURNISH POLIO CONSULTATION

The Michigan Crippled Children Commission again this year will establish Poliomyelitis consultation service where families are not financially able to provide this service, it was announced today by Dr. Carleton Dean, Director.

The diagnostic service is available to children from birth to 20 years of age where consultation is not furnished locally, Dr. Dean stated. Announcement of the program will be sent next week to secretaries of local county medical societies and full time health officers.

Physicians desiring the services of pediatricians or orthopedic surgeons for consultation should contact local medical society secretaries, Dr. Dean said.

The Pilgrim Circle will hold a Bazaar, Bake Sale and Ice Cream Social on the lawn of the Congregational church from 3 to 5 p. m. on Thursday, August 17.—32t2.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

GAYLORD—"Holy Mackinaw!" So you think this 1944 summer is hot and dry? H'mp!"

"Old Eagle Eye" Jim Bunyon, the same old spindle-legged tobacco-chewing printer of yore, squinted through his spectacles as he snorted." The tone of his voice was enough to indicate an old-timer's scorn.

We hadn't encountered Jim since we visited Gladstone last August, we were surprised to find him, busy at his printer's trade, at the office of Paul MacDonald's Otsego County Herald-Times here. En route to a publisher's meeting at Sault Ste. Marie, from whence next week's Mirror will be written we paused for a minute while Jim unfolded the story.

VACATIONERS SHOULD SALVAGE PAPER

Summer vacationers can help fill the gap in waste paper collections by salvaging accumulations of newspapers, magazines and cartons at cottages and resorts and seeing to it that they reach collection agencies, it is pointed out by Kenneth M. Burns, chairman of the State Salvage Committee of the Michigan Office of Civilian Defense.

"We want to urge each summer vacationist to salvage all paper and cartons possible," Burns said. "If collection facilities are not provided within the resort, the job of collecting paper from the neighboring cottages can be turned over to children. Paper can be taken by individual cottagers to shopping centers near resorts. If cottagers are uncertain as to what to do with it, and we also have asked chairmen in resort areas to make arrangements for central collection points. In any event, the paper should not be destroyed, the need is too critical."

The forestry division of the state conservation department is concerned primarily with the development and management of 13 state forests aggregating 3,225,000 acres, of which more than 60 per cent are in state ownership.

A request for a permit to catch "wild canaries" has been denied by the conservation department.

A fly rod is a weak lever to use in prying a three-foot, 25-lb. catfish from the bottom of a lake, but Austin of Tecumseh accomplished the feat on Evans lake, east of W. J. Hayes state park. Getting the big fish to the surface after a protracted struggle, Austin used a small landing net to hold its head still enough to hook his fingers into its gills and drag it into the boat. The fish had swallowed a shiner which Austin was using as bait. Sherm Cary, conservation department district parks superintendent, measured and weighed the fish.

Counting 243 deer in the first 15 days of July, William J. Cronk, Montmorency county conservation officer, saw two bucks, 40 does, three fawns, and three deer whose sex was uncertain in one three-hour period. Conservation officers and game men are conducting their annual census of deer populations in their areas.

At two periods of the year, in April and again in August and September, mortality of muskrats on Michigan highways increases noticeably.

If ice is not available, dressed fish can be kept in good condition for several hours by packing in aquatic vegetation such as watercress, or in damp, green leaves or grass.

Over 13½ million pounds of point-free edible meat was taken by hunters and trappers in Michigan last year, according to conservation department figures. The total of 6,808 tons of meat was 309 tons greater than the 1942 take.

Largest increases in the 1943 take of game animals were of muskrats, raccoons, and opossums. Lowered take of rabbits, hares, ruffled and sharptailed grouse, and prairie chicken reflected cyclical declines in populations, according to department game authorities. Fox and gray squirrels and coot also were taken in smaller numbers.

Total 1943 take was an estimated 13,617,360 pounds of dressed meat; that for 1042 was 13,198,887 pounds.

War needs alone will require seventeen billion feet of lumber this year, the WPB estimates. Hence, anyone whose carelessness starts a fire is sabotaging the war effort.

Today, about one barrel of oil in every seven produced in Michigan is coming from wells on state-owned lands.

Eighty-five fires, largest number reported during any week this summer, give emphasis to the conservation department's appeal to resorters and berry pickers to help safeguard the state's forests.

Several women are serving as fire watchers this summer in the 137 towers of the department's forest fire protection system.

Loss so far this year in 890 fires total 12,513 acres. Last week's loss was 289 acres.

General Dwight D. Eisenhower, Supreme Commander, Western Invasion: Brilliant Commander-in-Chief of Allied operations in Africa. Recently made a Knight of the Grand Cross of the Bath by Britain. Keen strategist and planner, he has the happy faculty of welding Britons and Americans into an efficient, cooperative, fighting team.

Air Chief Marshal Sir Arthur Tedder, Deputy Supreme Commander, Western Invasion: His air armadas blasted the way open to victory in Africa and Sicily, and gained complete air control of the Mediterranean area. Was in the Royal Flying Corps in the last war, and has been in military aviation ever since. Deviser of "Ruston tea parties" — a highly successful form of pattern-bombing carried out by Bostons and Baltimores.

Lieut. General Omar Bradley, Senior Commander American Ground Forces: Known as "the doughboys' general," he assumed his present command after service in Tunisia and Sicily. An infantry man, he graduated from West Point in 1915, where he was in the same class as General Eisenhower.

General Sir Bernard Montgomery, Commander-in-Chief, British Group of Armies: Teetotaler, non-smoking "Monty" led the Eighth Army's desert pursuit when Rommel was routed from El Alamein to Tunisia. A veteran of the last war, when he was awarded the D.S.O., the Croix de Guerre and was mentioned six times in dispatches, he has 33 years of army experience behind him.

Admiral Sir Bertram Ramsay, Allied Naval Commander: Nicknamed "Dynamo" for his handling of the Dunkirk evacuation, which carried that code name. Ramsay also commanded the task forces which landed the Allied armies on the beaches of Sicily and Salerno. He is a master of amphibian operations.

Air Chief Marshal Sir Trafford Leigh-Mallory, Air Commander-in-Chief: Largely responsible for the R.A.F.'s fighter offensive for the past three years; as head of the Fighter Command, he directed fighter operations during the battle of Britain, and in the Dieppe raid, when his group shot down 170 German planes — more than a third of the German air force in the west at that time.

Lieut. General Walter Bedell Smith, Chief of Staff, Supreme Headquarters: Nicknamed "Bulldog" by Churchill shortly after his arrival in England, he was awarded the D.S.M. and the Oak Leaf Cluster for outstanding service in the Tunisian campaign. Saw service in France during the last war.

GOOD FOOD — LIQUORS

A QUICK STEW SAVES TIME

How to save time so that today is long enough to do all the things that have to be done is a problem. When less time is spent in meal preparation, there is more time to do other things. Left-over meat is in the refrigerator or ready-to-eat meat is available at the market, dinner can be ready in a jiffy, featuring a delicious stew.

Quick Stew

2 cups diced cooked or ready-to-eat meat
2 tablespoons drippings
2 tablespoons flour
1 can vegetable soup

Brown cooked meat in drippings, add flour and a can of vegetable soup. Heat and serve on hot biscuits or potatoes.

STATE SURVEY OF POSSIBLE POTATO PESTS

In cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, County Agricultural Agents, Michigan State College and this department and bureau we are cooperating in a survey which is being made of the potato growing counties to determine whether or not potato tuber worm or golden nematode is present within Michigan.

The survey has been started in Monroe County and will be carried on in Lenawee, Jackson, Macomb, Lapeer, Kent, Montcalm, Osceola, Grand Traverse, Antrim, Otsego, Emmet, Presque Isle, Menominee, Delta, Marquette and Houghton and in addition to these regular industrial counties some little time will be spent on the other potato growing areas of the state.

Charles Figy, Commissioner of Agriculture, says because of the lack of knowledge as to what this organism may mean to the potato industry within the United States it seems highly desirable that such a survey be made to ascertain if it occurs in other important potato producing areas, and for this purpose a limited survey is being undertaken in nearly all of the northern potato growing states.

FOX TRAPPING HELP IS NOW AVAILABLE

Chasing red fox over hill and dale may be romantic sport for red-coated Kentucky and Virginia huntsmen astride their horses and followed by a pack of hounds, but the sight of a red fox makes some Michigan poultry and livestock producers "see red."

The last state legislature appropriated $20,000 to finance the cost of fox control in all parts of the state. Farmers losing poultry or other livestock to rad fox should report the damage to their county agricultural agent, who will arrange with the State Conservation department to obtain the services of a trapper-instructor to come to the county to give trapping instruction. Not only will the instructor show farmers how to trap fox, but he will conduct neighborhood demonstration meetings on farms where requested.

Michigan hunters and trappers last year took approximately 22,000 red fox, according to State Conservation department figures.

Another tropical beauty from our far-flung war fronts is the vivacious Girl from Australia. Watch for her in the new "Global Glamour" series of paintings by the well-known artist, Henry Clive. VACCINATE HOGS TO PREVENT CHOLERA

Michigan farmers who immunize their hogs against cholera, well in advance of the time the disease usually occurs in the state, save themselves money and worry.

Most severe outbreaks of the disease occur in late summer and early fall. In 1943 more than 2 million hogs died from cholera in the United States.

Usually, only a single animal becomes sick at first. This animal may display symptoms that should warn the farmer to suspect cholera. An affected animal at first shows lack of appetite. Later as the disease becomes more advanced, it shows signs of weakness, particularly in the hind legs and may walk in a characteristic weaving manner. The animal should be isolated at the first symptoms and a veterinarian called to determine the trouble.

Use of the regular serum-virus, sometimes called the simultaneous or double treatment, on pigs that have not already contracted the disease gives lasting protection. To insure success, this treatment should be given by a trained veterinarian. Recently, some newer products have been marketed that will provide protection, but these require a period of time before the animals are fully immunized. If it is necessary to protect the herd at once, the regular serum-virus treatment is the safest. This treatment will also afford protection to hogs that have been recently infected.

Many outbreaks of hog cholera have been traced to garbage. As a result, Michigan laws require that all hogs fed garbage coming from off the premises must be vaccinated.

"That's right, Judge, and I'm glad I'm still able to do it. Had a long letter from Harry... that bright young fellow I was breakin' in to take over my practice. He said the boys in the service are getting the best medical care of any armed force in our history. They really should with all those brilliant doctors and plenty of supplies to work with."

"Speaking of supplies, Doc, not many people realize that a large part of the alcohol required to make the medical supplies that are being used right this minute to alleviate pain, combat infection and save human lives, is produced by the beverage distilling industry. For nearly two years this entire industry has been working night and day producing nothing but alcohol for the government's program."

"Nobody knows better than I, Judge, what an important contribution to our war effort that has been."

Steel mats, many of which are made by United States Gypsum Company, are one of the innovations of this war. When the war ends this USG production will be returned to metal lath, used widely with gypsum plaster to add fire-safety and beauty to walls and ceilings.

FROZEN DESSERT EASY TO MAKE

Velva Fruit, the new commercial frozen fruit dessert with the smooth texture of ice cream, may be made at home either in a hand freezer or in the tray of a mechanical refrigerator. The dessert was developed at a regional laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Berries of several kinds, red plums, cantaloupes and peaches, may all be used for this dessert. Mellow, ripe fruit, too soft for canning but still edible, is ideal for Velva Fruit because it has full flavor and color.

To make the dessert at home, first wash the fruit, and remove any pits. Then crush and force the fruit through a sieve or potato ricer, fine enough to remove any seeds and skins. Save and use all juice. Because peaches darken on exposure to air, they should be halved and put in boiling dilute sugar sirup (10 per cent or ⅛ to ¾ cup of sugar to a quart of water) 5 minutes before sieving.

Ingredients, when tart fruit like berries or plums are used, are: 3 cups sieved fruit; 1¼ cups sugar; 1 teaspoon household gelatin; ¼ teaspoon salt. When less acid fruit such as peaches or cantaloupes, is used, only 1 cup of sugar is needed, but 1/3 cup lemon juice is added for tartness. Mix together sieved fruit, sugar, salt and lemon juice if used. Keep this mixture cold while softening gelatin in cold water. Dissolve the gelatin by heating 5 minutes over boiling water. Stir dissolved gelatin into fruit-sugar mixture.

Rapid freezing is recommended because it gives a smoother texture. In a hand freezer freeze like ice cream, using 1 measure salt to 8 measures ice. The mixture requires 15 or 20 minutes of turning to freeze. Remove dasher and pack to harden, using 3 measures of ice to 1 measure salt. Drain off water as the ice melts.

In refrigerator trays, leave the mixture to freeze overnight. Remove in the morning, break into small chunks with spoon, then whip smooth in chilled bowl with egg beater, and return to refrigerator for final freezing. Velva Fruit made in the refrigerator is not so smooth as that made in a hand freezer.

One quart of the mixture freezes to about 1½ quarts of Velva Fruit.

FAULTY NUTRITION IS CALLED CAUSE OF MANY DISEASES

"Evidence is accumulating that some of the so-called degenerative diseases which take such a large toll after middle years may be the end result of faulty nutrition," according to Dr. William DeKleine, state commissioner of health. In an article published in the August issue of the department's monthly bulletin, "Public Health", he states that the problem of nutrition is not so much a question of lack of information, as it is a failure to apply the knowledge we possess.

The article continues: "Medical science has often been twitted because it has not added any years to the span of life after middle age. Child life has been extended a great deal but not so with life after we reach 45 years or thereabouts. Life expectancy after 45 or 50 has made some gains in the last quarter of a century but not as much as it should.

"Perhaps we cannot look for an increased span of life until adults as well as children learn to readjust their eating habits and eat the foods they need for health.

"We continue to blunder along and eat what we like best even though it means a gradual deterioration of the body and will end in crippling illness and premature death."

Free pamphlets on the food needs of adults and children are available from local health departments or the Michigan Department of Health, Lansing 4.

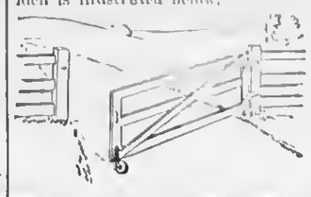
Fixing Up the Farm by BURTON WILLIAMS

Find the Easy Way

WAR or peace, the essentials of good farm management change very little. There are many hard ways, and one easy way, to do every farm job. You may find that a little time spent analyzing the equipment and ways of doing things on your farm will pay big dividends in time and toil saved.

A good method to use in making a survey of this sort is to ask yourself a few questions. Does this job have to be done? Can it be done an easier way? Can one man do it instead of two? Will changing the order of work make it easier? Is there a better tool or piece of equipment?

Often you will find that just a little change or some simple idea will make a big difference in saving time and trouble. One such idea is illustrated below.



In order to prevent sagging and hard opening of a long gate, put a wheel at the end of it. This will lengthen the life of the gate, besides making it a lot easier to use. You probably can find several old wheels around the place that will do the trick, and it's an easy job to fasten it to the gate.

"My neighbor on the next street had a telephone installed. Why did he get one before me?"

Possibly your neighbor is a person to whom a telephone is essential in performance of important war duties, or for public health, welfare or security. Such orders come first today, and are filled promptly.

Or he may have moved from elsewhere in the same exchange or an adjacent one where he already had service. Or, it may be that your neighbor ordered a telephone before you did, in which case it's only right that he should have the preference. Such orders can be installed only as present users give up service. In handling them, we follow a uniform and fair procedure provided for in orders of the War Production Board and in tariffs filed with the proper regulatory bodies.

Problems like this are unavoidable in wartime, when the armed forces need almost all the telephone and other communications equipment that can be manufactured. We, too, will be glad when we again can supply all the service everybody needs — immediately.

LOWLY BEES IN CIRCUIT COURT

During the past week, Earl D. Green, R.F.D. No. 1, Pontiac, owner of a number of colonies of bees was convicted in the Oakland County Circuit Court on his failure to register his bee colonies and pay the state fees. This has been one of the necessary requirements of bee owners since Public Acts of 1935 as amended by section 16 of Public Acts of 1937 has been in effect.

The registration of colonies of bees or apiaries of bee owner's makes it possible for the State Department of Agriculture, through its inspection service to locate the bees and discover bee disease, if any. Mr. Green failed to register his bees from 1940 to 1944 and the court has required that all back fees be paid in full and the cost amounting to $50.00 be paid.

The honey industry of the state according to Charles Figy, Commissioner of Agriculture, is often referred to as a small business, both as to the size of the makers, (the bees) and the units involved by the various apiaries. Michigan, however, produces annually 15 million pounds of honey per year and unless disease control work is carried out the annual supply would be greatly reduced.

SAVE EGG CASES

In order to conserve food products the egg industry requires appruximately 45,000,000 new 30 dozen egg cases per year to ship the annual egg supply of the nation. Charles Figy, Commissioner of Agriculture, states that shippers are finding it difficult to secure enough egg cases to ship eggs, and urges that merchandising people and handlers to conserve used containers.

The WFA officials are reminding users that unless container manufacturers receive material and receive some advance ordera to prepare for material supplies, the supply in the next few months is going to be greatly reduced.

This is the season of the year when farm production of eggs is usually at its lowest, but it is only a matter of a few months before production is on the increase and containers will be greatly needed in order to conserve the supply.

Low-Cost Utility Shed

AS FOOD daily becomes an ever more important weapon of war, we must be on the alert for ways to expand the productive capacity of our farms. We probably can't enlarge the farm itself, but we can increase the output by reducing livestock mortality, enlarging herds and flocks, preventing waste of crops due to improper storage, and keeping all equipment in tip-top shape.

To help in these important jobs, illustrated below is a low-cost utility shed built largely of non-critical materials. It is widely adaptable to many different uses. Heifers can be sheltered, space provided for keeping calves, beef cattle housed, sheep added as a new profitable enterprise, or machinery protected against deterioration in such a shed. In any type of farming, it will reduce the use of the barn and save labor.

The simple design, using heavy poles, rigidly braced, makes a solid framework for a long-life building. It can be roofed and sided with non-critical asbestos cement board, which is now generally obtainable. Used lumber, if available, can be used for the necessary framework.

Public Health Issues Warning

A warning against removing tonsils during the polio season was sent to all health officers in the state early in August by Dr. William DeKleine, State Commissioner of Health. This message stated, "The presence of poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) cases in Michigan raises the question of the danger of the removal of tonsils during the polio season. There is very suggestive evidence to indicate that the removal of tonsils may predispose children to an attack of poliomyelitis. This evidence furthermore suggests that the type of poliomyelitis most commonly observed in tonsillectomized children is of a severe type."

Eighty-two cases of poliomyelitis occurred in Michigan during July, compared with eleven cases in July, 1943. Ordinarily poliomyelitis increases during the summer months reaching its peak in September.

Only once in the past ten years have there been this many cases of polio so early in the season, according to Dr. DeKleine. In 1939, a total of 82 cases were reported in July and 385 in August. Polio caused 40 deaths during the 1939 epidemic.

HOME LUNCHEON HOT SANDWICH OH-SO-GOOD

Much help has been given this year to the homemakers who pack lunches for their families to carry with them. "But," says Jessie Alice Cline, home economist, "little attention has been given to the women who must prepare home luncheons for their families."

With schools in summer recess, ideas for home luncheons are sure to be welcome. Here is one of Miss Cline's favorite home luncheon menus:

Broiled Open Sandwiches
Carrot Souffle
Relish Tray
Chocolate Cup Cakes Milk

Broiled Open Sandwiches

1 pound small sausage links
2 tablespoons water
1 cup unsweetened applesauce
8 slices buttered toast
8 thin strips American cheese

Place sausage in cold frying-pan. Add water, cover and cook until water has evaporated. Remove cover, increase heat and cook until sausage is browned. Spread 2 tablespoons of applesauce on each slice of toast. Arrange 2 sausage links on each. Place American cheese strip across sausage. Broil slowly until cheese has melted. Makes 8 sandwiches.

Death in the Italian Hills

A dead American is being carried to the rear by his buddies from one of the Roman hills. The bearers are Medical Corpsmen. Lt. Gen. Mark Clark's men have done a terrific job in driving the Nazis back toward their fatherland but we have had our losses, too.

WAC Enlistments Show Big Gain In Lower Peninsula

LANSING — WAC enlistments in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan showed an increase of 27 percent in July over June, bringing the area from 45th to 15th place among the 59 recruiting districts of the United States, according to information transmitted to Capt. Donald S. Leonard, State Director of Civilian Defense, by Lt. Ninet Muncy, Commanding Officer of U. S. Army Recruiting in District No. 1, Sixth Service Command.

While actual figures are restricted information, enlistments in the Women's Army Corps in the district for June and July combined were almost double those for the preceding two months, Lt. Muncy said.

There are 239 jobs of various types open to WAC's, ranging from assignments as typists, personnel work and teletype operators to technical jobs such as control tower operator, photographer or medical technician. WACs draw the same pay rate as men in equivalent ranks of the Army.

OVERHEAD GAS BARRELS SAVE TIME

For a long time, Jim Besko, St. Johns RFD route 6, went through the usual chore of climbing on a chicken crate, ladder, or perching one foot in the tractor drive pulley while lifting a five-gallon can of gasoline to the rim of a high gasoline tank funnel. With the advent of metered gasoline delivery trucks, Mr. Besko mounted his gasoline storage barrels overhead in a shed, making possible the transfer of gasoline by gravity through a hose to the tractor.

He attached an ordinary, kitchen anti-splash faucet strainer to strain the gasoline before it enters the tractor tank. Often he lets the gasoline run into the tractor tank while he greases some part of the tractor or tool, thus doing two jobs at the same time.

The importance of this labor-saving device begins to be realized when one has handled 30 gallons of gasoline a day for a few days the old way in five-gallon lots, says Mr. Besko. (Furnished through courtesy Michigan State College Extension Service and Agricultural Engineering Department.)

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

What Made Our Invasion a Success?

With 57 blue stars on our Service Flag, our town's been mighty excited over the way things are progressing on the Continent.

"Shucks," says Bob Newcomb happily, "I knew we were going to lick them Nazis, soon as the Invasion started."

"I knew it before that," says Doc Hollister. "I knew it from the way our boys were getting along with their British buddies in those English camps. They had a lot of differences to overcome before they could work together as a team. And they overcame 'em."

From where I sit, Doc's mighty right. The success of our Invasion began months ago—when the English Tommies and the GI Joes got together over friendly beer, and games of darts—and learned to like each other in spite of differences in tastes and habits.

And that spirit of tolerance and understanding between men and nations will go far towards building a secure Peace, too.

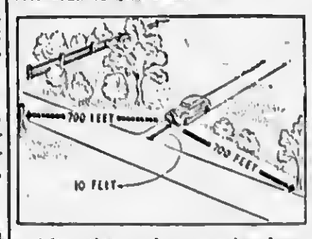
Fixing Up the Farm
by BURTON WILLIAMS

Safety Suggestion

THE farm driveway is a serious traffic menace because it is often flanked with trees, bushes or tall crops, making it impossible for drivers traveling on the highway to see farm vehicles about to enter the road.

To avoid accidents at the entrance to your drive, make this visibility test: First, park your car in driveway with the bumper ten feet from the nearest edge of the main road, as illustrated. Next, pace off a distance of about 700 feet (290 paces) along the highway to the left and place a marker at the edge of the pavement, on the same side as the driveway entrance. Then set another marker 700 feet down the road from the drive in the opposite direction. In this case set a marker on the opposite side of the road.



After the markers are in place, go back to your car and sit in the driver's seat. If the markers can be seen, the visibility is adequate for highway speeds up to 60 miles an hour. If the view is obstructed, all obstructions should be removed in the triangular area shown in the illustration.

If a heavy, slow-starting truck is to use the driveway, it will be necessary to place the markers at least 850 feet away, instead of 700 feet.

Yanks of the 37th Division Mop Up on Bougainville

Cleaning up the Japs on Bougainville in the South Pacific was a tough job. On March 8 he counterattacked our forces and then, for three weeks it was a case of digging him out of his holes in the ground. Note the soldier on the extreme left, forward, getting ready to wipe out a Jap. These men of the 37th played for keeps. Nip losses ran into the thousands.

This picture, like all four in this set, was taken under fire, unreal as some may appear. Yet study the men closely and you will see alertness in every move. They are approaching the edge of a hole where a Jap is hiding. They got their man. It takes days to clean up these isolated snipers.

Here are a couple of Yanks manning a machine gun, firing at a Jap pillbox. The slight haze is smoke. Our boys have found that the Japs almost always fight to the death.

Morning in the jungles of Bougainville. Light slowly filters through the trees as these Yanks of the 37th Division wait behind a tank during the mop up. Just ahead is a Jap pillbox still manned by the little men of Nipson. It wasn't there long, however.

of Lockwood and Minor. Alpena was left a smoking ruin.

"Alpena folks built her up again, but forest fires returned in 1863 and 1867, and 1869. By the year of 1871, Alpena lumberjacks were kinda getting lonesome. The town hadn't burned down for two years, and life was almost in a rut.

"That big fire of 1871 came after a long, dry summer. The sun shown day after day, and nary a cloud appeared in the sky. Crops were parched, and by the time of Sunday, October 8, the whole northern country was crisp as tinder.

"Holland was the first town to be hit by forest fire, fanned by a high wind. The Hope College town was pretty near razed to the ground. College buildings were in smoldering ruins, and 73 business houses were cleaned out. At Manistee, some 150 miles north of Holland, the fire jumped out of the woods Sunday afternoon and destroyed 205 homes.

"At Lansing the Michigan Aggie students turned out and saved the state capitol. Yes sirree! And in Midland county the shingle mills of George Rockwell, Collier & Garber, and Reardon & Anderson, and Dowlers, all at Midland, were laid waste. Gratnot county, too, was badly hit, while flames raced through the entire Saginaw valley from St. Charles to Birch Run.

"And up in the Thumb! Why the forest fires on that same Sunday, October 8, back in 1871, destroyed a lot of bustling towns, such as Sand Beach, Huron City, Elbo Creek, Richmondville, Forestville and White Rock. Most likely you never heard of White Rock, except on a bottle. White Rock was a booming town, an paper anyway, and when Douglass Houghton, state geologist, visited it on his way to northern Michigan, it was just a naked rock, plastered with seagulls' droppings, where White Rock Creek emptied into Lake Huron.

"Other towns in the fires' path were Ubly, Bad Axe, Port Huron, Tawas City and Cass City. The big lumber town of Saginaw was spared, somehow, although five buildings were destroyed over in East Saginaw.

"All in all, about two million acres of land were blackened by the great fire of October 8 in the Lower Peninsula alone. And up in the U. P. — well, maybe you've heard of the big Peshtigo disaster seven miles south of Marinette in Wisconsin. This story was reported by Luther B. Noyes in his Marinette and Peshtigo Eagle which he had started in June of that year. More than 600 persons died in a raging inferno that swept Peshtigo.

"My pappy often told me that this October 8, 1871 fire was the greatest forest fire in the history of the United States. They estimate the total dead at 1,152 of whom more than 600 were lost at the town of Peshtigo.

"But strangely enough, this 1871 disaster up in the north country and across the lower peninsula of Michigan wasn't reported in the newspapers for several weeks. Not that the journals in those days weren't on the job. They were. Their headlines for many days were all about another news story you've heard about. The Chicago fire started also on Sunday, October 8, and it was weeks before Harper's Weekly printed anything about Michigan and Peshtigo. Can you beat that?"

Gaylord, with its altitude of 1,350 feet, has had its fires too. Paul MacDonald, who owns the local newspaper ,tells of the time when the smoke of forest fires could be seen on all sides of the town.

To old-timers such as Jim Bunyon and his tribe, forest fires have been a familiar part of the life of Michigan's north country. In the fall of 1923 a fire sprung up near Silver City, in the Porcupines, and swept over at least 500,000 acres of timber and several lumbering camps. Near Escanaba, as late as 1933, a forest fire burned stubbornly from August to September 29, despite the efforts of more than 600 men.

Michigan, once a lumber-producing state, has become a great industrial empire, world-famous for its automobiles and furniture and other products. Its north country is becoming, more and more, the healthful haven for vacation-seeking city dwellers from cities through the mid-west.

And when the hot and dry summers appear, a few ageless natives, such as Jim Bunyon, scan the cloudless skies and sniff the air and then spin those yarns about old Michigan when lumber was king and forest fires were something to tell your children about.

We almost forgot to tell you about Jim Bunyon's grand-pappy. He was a Michigan lumberjack whose stature was befitting such a great state. Yep, his first name was Paul.

HIT GERMAN DEFENSES!

ON THE INVASION FRONT—This M-3 tank is smashing at German lines on the invasion front. These tanks were a big help in halting the initial Nazi counteroffensives as allied troops swarmed ashore during the first crucial days. Thousands of similar Continental Aircraft type engines that power these tanks, were used in trainers developing America's great air strength.

'WATER BUFFALOES' LAND TROOPS!

ON THE INVASION FRONT—Here are American infantrymen being landed on the invasion beaches by "water buffalo" amphibians. Benny Walker sends some very good and interesting news from Camp Polk, La., he writes that their military intelligence has discovered a secret weapon owned by the German army that will end the war any day now — It's a long pole with a white flag on it. Here's hoping they put it in action soon so those in uniform can get back to that wonderful place called home in Charlevoix.

Horace (Bud) C. Pulsipher, son of the Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Pulsipher, who entered the service in the Spring is now attending service school and has the following address: Sec. G 6-11, Bks. 164, U. S., Great Lakes, Ill.

S/Sgt. Robert Gill writes from Camp Howze, Texas, with a correction. Seems he has been technician, third grade (which is equivalent to a staff sergeant) for some time. He also writes "What I wouldn't give to be back in Charlevoix right now. I've never had the luck to get a furlough during the hotter seasons and it's plenty hot here now. No one here can brag about their home-town as much as I can for when they bring up the subjects of lakes I tell them that there are three lakes within eight blocks from my home and that closes the argument for the day.

I am still in the radio section as operator and team chief. Recently we have been spending a lot of our time in the field. Before that I was in charge of a Divisional Radio School. The field gives us a break from garrison life but out there the woods are infested with snakes and chiggers, you can't take a bath, etc., but I like it.

Archie L. Livingston S1c, who until recently was stationed at the Naval Air Base at Hutchinson, Kans., has been transferred to the Naval Training Station at Newport, R. I. He writes that he will not be there long. He expects to go on sea duty before long on a ship that is just being commissioned.

Pvt. Philo Howe of the Military Police, writes from Oak Ridge, Tenn., with a new address and has the following to say about his new assignment, I can't write much but I can say that this place is heaven beside the place we came from. It is as close to civilian life as one could be and still be in the army. I know there are thousands of fellows who would be more than happy to change places with me.

This is what I mean: I used to get up at all hours of the day and night to go on duty. Now we roll out between 7 and 7:30 and go over to chow. And by the way, it's not GI mess. We eat in a cafeteria and eat what we want. We have colored maids to make our beds and clean the floors. No Reveile or Retreat. We go to school from about 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. They're really banker's hours.

But things like that can't last forever and when I finish school this week I go to work, what; why, where or when I don't know and if I did I couldn't say. Wish all the boys could have a bit of it. They'd enjoy it as much as I have.

Cpl. Orville Shanaquet writes from somewhere in Italy to thank the Courier and CSO for the paper each week. He writes; Italy—where the country is very beautiful, but I'll take the States anytime. I've had my fill of foreign countries. They can send me home anytime. My best regards to all the boys in the service.

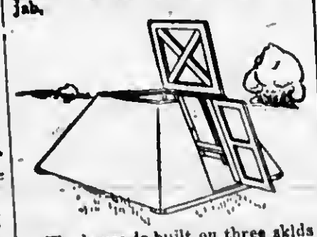
Safety Hog House

AN IMPORTANT part of the food-for-freedom program is the provision of adequate shelters for animals. If farmers are going to increase production, care must be taken to see that every animal on the place is protected from the weather. The asbestos board farrowing house illustrated below will prove a great help in doing this job.



The house is built on three skids or runners. Its low height and small size mean conservation of heat and protection against the sow moving around too much and raking and piling the bedding. Daytime ventilation and sunshine may be had through the ingenious lift-top. When both top and door are open the herdsman can walk in erect. If attacked by a vicious sow, escape is easy. Cleaning and washing are simple and quick.

Complete plans for building the safety hog house will be sent free upon request by the Asbestos Farm Service Bureau, 221 North LaSalle St., Chicago 1, Ill.

Fixing Up the Farm
by BURTON WILLIAMS

Non-Critical Materials

BECAUSE some building materials are scarce, farmers are being urged to use non-critical materials to the fullest extent. Among the non-critical materials particularly well suited for farm construction and repair are asbestos cement products.

They include asbestos roofing shingles, sidings and asbestos board. Made of two mineral products, asbestos fibers and portland cement, they are fireproof and weatherproof.

Worn-out exterior walls can be restored to sound condition with asbestos sidings. They go on right over old walls, providing a fireproof armor which will last for years without preservative treatment. The same may be done with asbestos shingles on leaky roofs.

Asbestos Protected Milk House

A versatile material for hundreds of farm uses is asbestos cement board. Produced in large sheets, it can be used for interior wall linings, siding small buildings, building partitions and ceilings, and constructing portable farm buildings.

The many uses of these non-critical materials are shown in a new 24-page booklet, "Build It with Asbestos," which is available without charge from the Asbestos Farm Service Bureau, 221 North LaSalle Street, Chicago 1, Ill.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
By B. C. MELLENCAMP

Snap Bean Emergency Begins Next Week

According to the acreages compiled in this office, Charlevoix county has 254 acres of snap beans requiring at least four pickers per acre for the next six weeks. Although many of these beans are to be picked by the family of the grower, it is anticipated that at least 600 additional workers will be needed.

Reid, Murdock and Company are planning on furnishing some Mexican workers to their larger growers. Workers are now being recruited and transportation is being arranged for the Victory Farm Volunteers which will be youths over 12 years of age. Bean growers needing pickers can apply at any of the three registration centers.

Fruit Plantations Need Cover Crops

Charlevoix county orchards, vineyards, and small fruit plantations which have been cultivated during the summer should be sowed to a covercrop within the next few weeks, suggests Newton B. Partridge, research associate in horticulture, Michigan State College.

The growth of such a crop is always beneficial and may help to prevent winter-killing of fruit trees, such as occurred two years ago.

Choice of covercrops will depend somewhat on the kind of fruit grown, since it is usually inadvisable to sow a crop that will survive the winter in a vineyard or small fruit plantation owing to difficulty in subduing the crop in the spring. Sudan grass will usually make the most vigorous and the largest amount of growth of any crop to be sowed between August 1 and 15 at a seeding rate of 20 to 25 pounds per acre. Some of the millets will make about as heavy a growth as the Sudan when sowed on soils of a loamy nature in good tilth. German millet is usually as vigorous a grower as any of them. The seeding rate is 30 to 35 pounds per acre.

Oats will usually make less growth than the Sudan grass or the millet but will often furnish considerable cover when the weather is favorable, seeding at a rate of 1¾ to 2 bushels per acre. Rye will provide a cover that will resist erosion throughout the winter. It will often prove a difficult crop to control in the spring when neglected at first and it will not serve to mature the trees effectively in unfavorable autumns. Many hundreds of peach trees were killed in the winter of 1941-42 and little difference could be seen between those orchards where there was no covercrop and those where rye was sown.

Covercrop growth may be increased by the use of light applications of manure or nitrogen fertilizers when they are available. Although Michigan State College tests have included other fertilizers, nitrogen is by far the most affective in increasing covercrop growth. A large growth of cover crop is not obtained in close plantings of mature trees at this season of the year, no matter what crop is used or what practices are followed, except under unusual conditions such as an exceptional rainfall. Orchard trees must be wisely set if organic matter is to be grown in sufficient quantities in the orchard to maintain a permanent horticulture.

TOWN and FARM in WARTIME
Prepared by OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION

Plentiful Foods During August

Foods expected to be plentiful throughout most of the country during August, according to the War Food Administration, are fresh tomatoes, fresh peaches, peanut butter, citrus marmalade, canned green and wax beans, frozen vegetables, frozen baked beans, dry-mix and dehydrated soups, oatmeal, wheat flour and bread macaroni, spaghetti, noodles and soya flour, grits and flakes.

Gasoline for Those on Leave

Members of the Armed Services will get a gallon of gasoline for each day of their leave or furlough up to 30 gallons, according to a new Office of Price Administration policy. No ration will be granted for passes, for liberties or for leaves or furloughs of less than three days, at the suggestion of the Army and Navy. The member of the Armed Services should apply for gasoline rations to the War Price and Rationing Board having jurisdiction over the automobile he is to drive and he should present proper leave or furlough papers.

G. I. Vets Want Education

More than 1,000 Veterans G. I. Jobs already have applied to the Veterans Administration for Educational Benefits offered them under the so-called G. I. Bill of Rights. In addition, 4,000 written inquiries and many additional telephone inquiries about benefits offered under the Bill have been received. To be eligible for Educational Benefits, a Veteran must have had his Education interrupted and must have had 90 days active service since September 16, 1940, with separation under conditions other than dishonorable. Veterans who entered service before they were 25 years old are presumed to have had their education interrupted.

Cut Fire Wood to Save Coal

Every extra cord of fire wood American farmers supply for fuel can save from one-half to a ton of coal, WPB advises. Coal supplies this year will be short and vitally needed by essential war industries.

Some New School Buses At Last

After almost total lack of new school buses for two years, WPB approved a 1944 production quota of 5,400, of which more than 2,100 already have been released to schools where new buses were needed to prevent abandoned and replace unsafe equipment. The Office of Defense Transportation reports.

Factory-Damaged Shoes

Mr. Consumer may be lucky enough to get a pair of factory-damaged shoes without shoe ration coupons and for no more than $1.80 a pair, if his shoe dealer happens to have some such shoes on hand and obtains permission from the OPA District Office to sell them sanctioned. The dealer must apply for the release of these factory-damaged shoes before August 31, but there is no time limit on the sales after the dealer has received the OPA non-rationed stickers and attached them to the shoes.

Pear Prices Down, Says OPA

Fresh pears for your table should cost no more than 15 cents a pound until September 16, and after that until next April, no more than 17 cents a pound, OPA says. With fresh pears for table use under price control for the first time, OPA looks for a reduction of about 20 per cent from last year's retail prices.

Burma Road Remains Important Military Object

This section of the Burma road in China was taken by a signal corps photographer. The China-Burma-India theater of war contains 21 switchbacks as shown in this photograph. Even before America entered the war, engineers from American military and civil life were cooperating with the Chinese in the improvement and development of this highway system. The road is essential to China. It serves as the only line of communication, outside of air, that serves a vast portion of the country. The road has been under air bombardment almost continually since the start of the Chinese-Japanese war.

Great Lakes Vessels Break All Records

For the fourth consecutive month this season, combined bulk cargoes delivered in Great Lakes vessels during July broke all existing tonnage records, it was announced today as compilation of totals from all ports was completed by the Lake Carriers' Association.

The bituminous coal movement set another new high, with 6,917,938 net tons shipped — substantially more than in any corresponding month during past seasons. The June movement of this commodity likewise was the highest on record.

Although grain shipments traditionally taper off during mid-summer, the July traffic exceeded 51,000,000 bushels, amounting to 1,481,549 tons.

Delivery of ore from the northern iron ranges to blast furnaces and lower lake ports continued well in line with shipping schedules laid down at the opening of navigation this year. Although the total was less than in July of 1943 and 1942, the 14,458,049 net tons of iron ore moved last month raised the combined tonnage of all bulk commodities to 22,857,536 net tons, which was three-quarters of a million tons greater than for the corresponding month of the record-breaking year of 1942.

STATE FARMERS TO PROVE COWS MAKE PAYROLL

Michigan dairy farmers are out to prove to the nation that the cow is an important citizen, indeed, and a No. 1 factor in steady paychecks for city factory workers as well as the men on the farm.

Charles Stone, manager of the American Dairy Association of Michigan, announced that dairymen of Michigan and other leading milk-producing states have united behind a nation-wide informational campaign to demonstrate that dairying is the backbone of agriculture and that "agriculture is the foundation of the nation's economic life."

The campaign, he said, was decided upon at a meeting of the national executive committee of the American Dairy Association, non-profit, farmer-financed and farmer-controlled organization of milk producers in major dairy states for protection and progress of the industry and its products.

The national dairy leaders adopted the new ADA program in a move to bridge a wide gap in public understanding of the farmer, especially the dairyman.

Stone said their declaration emphasized the necessity for making post-war jobs for servicemen and laid-off war workers and for maintaining a high national income.

FOSTER BOAT CO. GETS ANOTHER NAVY CONTRACT

Local Product Reported Seen In Many Waters

Foster Boat Co. has been granted another navy contract this week. Necessary tooling up operations are now in progress as the company is interviewing experienced joiner men to add to their present force. Production is to begin soon on this new order for sailing dinghies.

Several local boys now serving overseas have written that they have seen and have been transported in boats bearing the Foster nameplate. T. S. Tanner, former professor of architecture at the U. of M., writes his two sons at Camp Charlevoix that he is in the Admirality Islands group and has been assigned to a Foster craft.

Andre delights his audience both as a singer and a pianist and is hailed as a prodigy by critics and enthusiastic admirers.

SPEBSQSA Plans Big Jamboree

Of the many odd cults and isms indigenous to the United States one of the most unique is the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartette Singing in America, Inc. This is a national organization with local chapters throughout the country, composed of addicts of improvised four-part vocal harmony. Each chapter holds regular sessions which last far into the night and once a year trys to put on a public exhibition, usually designated as a parade of quartettes. The national organization annually sponsors a contest of quartettes which determine the champions for the current year.

Public interest in these contests has grown to such an exteat that reservations are sold out weeks in advance. In fact, the Saturday Evening Post is running an article about the society in an early release, possibly this week.

The Charlevoix Chapter number 19, while perhaps lacking in numbers, includes in its personnel some of the most rabid type of enthusiasts for this sometimes pleasing pastime. The local Chapter presents its Second Annual Quartette Jamboree Labor Day Week End, September 2, 3 and 4. The present world champions, The Harmony Halls Quartette will be featured. Also expected are the Unheard of Four, the Continentals and the Blendettes, a ladies Quartette from Muskegon, the Heldingaires, The Slap Happy Chapples and others.

Helping to represent the local chapter will be the Charlevoix Ballad Benders pictured above.

Keep War Plants Manned—Byrnes

"We are still critically short of manpower in the neighborhood of plants making . . . heavy guns and ammunition, bombs, radar equipment, trucks, tanks, construction equipment, tires and tentage fabric," James F. Byrnes, Director of War Mobilization declared in connection with a directive providing for the shutting off of materials, fuel, power and services necessary to turn production facilities to the making of these emergency war materials. "We are going to handle the problem in the area where the plants are located" he stated. "We have placed responsibility on the area officials to take all necessary steps to free from civilian and less essential industries, men possessing the skills required to produce war goods." Wherever local committees in charge of the problem have excess manpower "they must accept a quota for recruitment in order to meet the needs of other critical areas," he explained.

Military Has Severe Shortages

"Production has dropped off slightly in the face of increased demands," from overseas, Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, of the Army Service Forces, said in citing some specific shortages suffered in various military theaters of war. Some examples cited were — One General had to call off 100 air missions because of lack of the right type of bombs; another General said he had to abandon 3,500 heavy trucks, which have to be replaced; rate of fire for artillery has more than doubled above estimates, thus increasing demands for new guns, replacement linings and ammunition. Heavy artillery rather than air power broke deadlocks at Anzio, Cassino and in Normandy, General Somervell said.

Laundry Stoves Unrationed

Rationing restrictions have been removed from coal-wood laundry stoves and gas ranges with nonmetallic outside back or side panels, OPA reports. The adequate supply of the small, flat-top laundry stoves, usually made of cast iron and used in many homes for laundry and auxiliary heating, made possible removal of rationing restrictions on these stoves.

Your Motor "Pings" for Victory

Turkey Breaks With Germany

After more than four years as a neutral, Turkey has broken relations with Germany. The Allies are expected to ask for and be granted bases from which to blast the Germans from the Aegean Isles and to attack Nazi satellite countries. The Turkish army might then move against Bulgaria, whose border is reported strongly fortified.

Cousin Lizzie

By W. T. HOWCOTT
McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Features.

SANDRA watched the tall cadet out of the corner of her eye. He had detached himself from the knot of fledgling aviators streaming from the train. He leaned against one end of the booth—just grinning. Sandra tilted her red USO cup to a less snuey angle and continued to pour coffee.

She knew that the Approach would follow. It always did. Vaguely, she wondered which one he would use. He seemed to be the you-remind-me-of-my-sister type — although the haven't-I-met-you-in-Atlanta theme had been gaining popularity in recent weeks. It was neither. "Er . . . pardon me, but . . . aren't you my cousin Lizzie?"

Sandra was caught completely off guard. Here was a brand-new one! "That's right." She smiled and pushed the jar of doughnuts toward him. "And I suppose you're 'the man who came to dinner?' "

"Shucks." The cadet grinned gullelessly. "I don't blame you for not recognizing me. It's been . . . let's see . . . twelve years now. I'm Lee—Lee Manley." He waited expectantly. Evidently that was supposed to explain everything.

"Oh!" Sandra exclaimed, her brown eyes widening. "Lee Manley. How cozy!" She gave him a cup of coffee. "That should make us old palsy-walsies."

His blue eyes sparkled disarmingly as he prattled on. "Mother told me you were working for the USO in Pensacola. All the way down here I've been wondering about you." He surveyed her trim figure with obvious satisfaction. "You're much prettier than I expected."

She smiled wryly. "Cream or sugar?" His line was beginning to follow familiar patterns.

"Look, Lizzie," he said, as he emptied his cup. "I don't have to report to the air station for another hour. Can't you take a little time out to show me the town?"

"Hmmmm," she mused. It appeared that she had an exceptionally smooth operator on her hands. She was interested in seeing what he'd think of next. "O. K., Sir Launcelot," she smiled. "I'll try to cover our little metropolis."

Outside, the warm Florida sun bathed Palafox street in its rich glow. Crowds of cadets, resplendent in spotless whites, filled the sidewalks. Femininity was at a premium in Pensacola. Several of the boys stared enviously at Lee. "Gosh," he observed, "the navy sure has taken over this town!"

"Wolves," Sandra declared, "all of 'em." They walked to the pier and looked out over the choppy water. In the distance a lumbering Catalina was silhouetted against the horizon. Overhead a flight of nine Vultees roared in perfect formation. Lee's eyes followed the planes until they were out of sight.

"Boy!" he breathed. "I can't wait to get at the controls."

Sandra smiled. Aviation cadets had two interests in life—planes and girls. For almost an hour they rambled aimlessly. Sandra grudgingly revised her first impression of Lee. He seemed as innocent as a schoolboy. For a change it was refreshing not to be subjected to a line. She still couldn't understand [illegible]. "Well," he answered. Guess I'll have [illegible]. "It wouldn't [illegible] the last date."

Oh, Sandra," called one of the girls. "I want you to meet our new assistant — Betty Reed." Sandra nodded mechanically. She was debating which form of torture would be most satisfactory . . . tar and feathers . . . or boiling in oil.

"I'm awfully sorry," said Betty, "I was to report two weeks ago but I've had such a cold . . . my cousin was supposed to come in today, too. Gosh, I sure hope I haven't missed him!"

"Your who!"

"My cousin . . ."

Sandra performed mental gymnastics. Betty—Elizabeth—Lizzie! Of course! She seized Betty by both shoulders. "Tell me quick. Is his name Lee—Lee Manley?"

"Why, yes. But, how did you . . . ?" Sandra had no time for questions. She dashed to the nearest telephone.

At that moment, in the cadet barracks, Jack Reed was talking to his roommate. "How're you doing?" he asked. "Got a date for the prom yet?"

"I don't know," Lee laughed. "I should hear any minute now."

"Well, don't worry about Betty," Jack grinned. "Sis was with the Little Theater. She'll handle her part all right."

The phone rang. Lee winked as he picked up the receiver.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. MELLENCAMP

Dry Weather Seriously Affecting Snap Beans

The dry weather is causing considerable loss in production this week. Several fields that should have been approaching their maximum yield are more or less standing still. Many growers who expected to use 20 to 30 pickers are getting only eight or ten. If a good rain arrives right at this point, with 250 acres of snap beans to harvest, we will need several hundred Victory Farm Volunteers to handle the crop.

The cherry season has ended with very little loss of tonnage. The East Jordan Canning factory closed on Tuesday, August 8th, and they report approximately 1200 tons canned this season. During last week, visits were made to cherry orchards to obtain information on the tons harvested, number of pickers used and other useful information. In a short time we will present a summary which will be of interest to the readers of this paper.

The cucumber season is also in progress with about the same difficulties as the snap bean crop. Dry weather is slowing the production to about the same degree. A plea is hereby made for more hand pickers. Thus far the demand has exceeded the supply available.

Make Plans Now for Sowing Wheat

Charlevoix County farmers planning to sow wheat in September should make arrangements for seed and fertilizer well in advance of seeding time, suggests members of the crops and soil science departments at Michigan State College.

Especially is this true of commercial fertilizer because of the shortage of labor in manufacture and delay in distribution to dealers, says Dr. O. E. Millar, head of the soil science department.

With consideration to market requirements farmers may choose any one of the different wheat varieties with good results, says Professor R. E. Decker, head of the farm crops department.

Where the local shipper prefers a red wheat, the Baldrock variety is suggested. However, if the market prefers a white wheat, either Yorkwin or American Banner should be grown, Professor Decker says. Yorkwin, a comparatively new wheat in Michigan, has outyielded other varieties 4 to 6 bushels per acre, in trials conducted by the Michigan Agricultural Experiment Station, Professor Decker states.

Choice and quantity of a commercial fertilizer for wheat, Dr. Millar says, are dependent on the soil type, previous soil treatment, and whether a legume is to be seeded in the wheat in the spring.

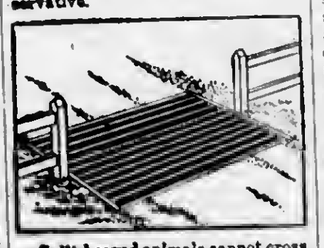
On the heavy loams, silt loams and clay loams, a 2-16-8 or a 2-12-6 fertilizer is desirable unless the soil is quite rich in humus or has been recently manured; in which case 18-20% superphosphate or 0-14-7 fertilizer will be satisfactory. From 200 to 300 lbs. of fertilizer to the acre is a reasonable application unless clover or alfalfa is to be seeded in the wheat. If a legume is to be seeded, one must remember that fertilizer is being applied for two crops, both the legume and the wheat. Up to the maximum 400-500 pound may profitably be applied. [illegible] of the heavy fertilizers [illegible] the greatest yield of hay will [illegible] only for the additional fertilizer.

On the lighter loams, soil sandy loams, [illegible] should be used unless manure has been recently applied. On these soils 2-16-8 or 2-12-6 will suffice, but 300 pounds of fertilizer to the acre should give profitable returns on land which is adapted to growing wheat. On these lighter soils, however, legume seedings do not usually succeed when made in wheat, Dr. Millar states.

Livestock Barrier

DO YOU want to stop wrestling with heavy, sagging gates every time you have to go through with a wagon or tractor? Just eliminate the roadway gate and use a livestock barrier.

A barrier can be built easily by scooping out a space four inches deep, six feet wide, and long enough to span the driveway. Next, make a framework of 2x4's to fit flat in the shallow pit as shown in the illustration. Place the 2x4's on edge, two and a half inches apart. All wood used should be saturated with creosote or a similar preservative.



Split-hooved animals cannot cross the barrier, but horses and vehicles can do so easily. A gate for use by the livestock can be provided at the side of the barrier or anywhere else that might be convenient.

Anything but the Truth

By ETHELYN PARKINSON
McClure Newspaper Syndicate WNU Features.

MISS Kitty Herrick and Miss Patty Lou Lee wished they were in swimming. But since Lieutenant Gavin Cornwall simply loathed athletic women, they lay quietly on the beach, clad in sun hats, goggles, lipsticks and the briefest of sun suits. "It's false pretense to act like a house plant, darling," Kit was saying, "when you're really the best girl athlete in our high school."

"No one here knows that," Patty said. "Besides anything goes—in love!"

"Anything but the truth, darling! And I wonder if it's love!" Kit sat up suddenly. "Look, Pat — competition!" A tall, blond girl was striding up the hotel steps. "Smooth," Kit observed.

"She's simply all muscles," Pat replied. "If Gavin looks at her twice, I'll eat my sun hat!" At that moment the door opened and Lieutenant Cornwall barged out. Stepping aside to let the blonde pass, he stood gazing after her.

"We-ell!" Kit whispered. "You'll admit he never looked at you that way, darling."

"Listen, Kit," Pat said, "that gal seems familiar. Let's go peek at the register."

"'Miss Eugenia Williams,'" Kit read. "Mean anything, Pat?"

"No . . . but she looks familiar."

"Oh, forget it! It's two o'clock. Your precious Gavin will be taking his nap. Let's sneak a swim."

The girls went around the bluff, out of sight. When they trailed back, Gavin was on the porch. "Think I'll go in for a coke," Pat said.

But just then Eugenia Williams strolled across the piazza and into the refreshment bar. After her went Gavin. Kit grinned. "Too late, Pat!"

Pat's eyes narrowed. "Kit," she whispered, "let's have a look at her room. I'll investigate while you stand sentry."

As a detective Pat was triumphant. "Tennis rockets, golf clubs, hiking boots! And on the flyleaf of a book—'Love to Speed!'"

"'Speed!'" Kit's eyes popped. "Then she's —"

"She's Speed Williams, the swimming star. Sh! Here she comes!" They met her as they walked down the hall. "We were just going to call on you, Miss Williams. We're Kit Herrick and Pat Lee."

Eugenia Williams smiled. "Come in, girls. Have a chocolate."

Kit glanced around the room. "Play tennis, Miss Williams?"

"Love to! But—"

"Golf?" Pat inquired sweetly.

"Nothing I enjoy more, except swimming. But —"

Pat sighed. "I wish I were athletic. But there's one advantage. Gavin Cornwall simply loathes athletic girls." When he was twelve, a [illegible] girl saved his life in the [illegible] ever [illegible] gave him a complex."

"How utterly crooked!" Pat whispered. "Just wait till he finds out what she is."

But Gavin was barking. "No one can swim with cramps! You were purple, Eugenia! Your pulse was almost gone! Why go in the water if your doctor tells you not to?"

"They told me you didn't like athletic girls, Gavin. I had to let you know that I — well, I —"

"That you're Speed Williams? I knew it all the time!" Gavin growled. "I've followed your career since I was twelve. Ever since you saved my skin and made me deathly afraid of girl athletes." His voice dropped. "Until I found you could be just as helpless — need me just as much, darling —"

Kit tittered hysterically. "Telling the truth! Both of 'em! Such lack of finesse! So crooked! Where you going, Pat?"

Pat tossed her head. "I'm having a good swim, tennis, golf and a hike before luncheon. Join me?"

"For everything but lunch." Kit giggled. "Because for lunch, darling, I guess you'll be eating [illegible] but!"

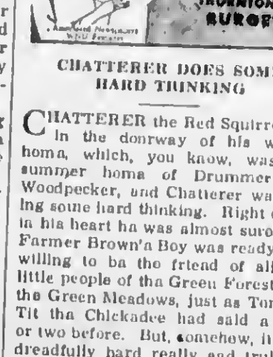
CHATTERER DOES SOME HARD THINKING

CHATTERER the Red Squirrel sat in the doorway of his winter home, which, you know, was the summer home of Drummer the Woodpecker, and Chatterer was doing some hard thinking. Right down in his heart he was almost sure that Farmer Brown's Boy was ready and willing to be the friend of all the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows, just as Tommy Tit the Chickadee had said a day or two before. But, somehow, it was dreadfully hard really and truly to believe it. It always is hard work to believe a thing when you always have believed just the other way around. All, or nearly all, the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows had looked on Farmer Brown's Boy as their greatest enemy, for so long that even when Tommy Tit did what he had said he would do and ate from the hand of Farmer Brown's Boy, it was hard to believe that others could do the same thing. And yet, Tommy Tit insisted they could.

"If you and Farmer Brown's Boy are not friends it is all your own fault," said Tommy. "How can you expect him to be friendly if you always run away and never give him a chance? All he wants is a chance to be friendly. I know, because I have proved it. I trusted him and now he is the best friend I have."

"I suppose," said Chatterer to himself as he thought it all over, "I suppose that I could try it for myself. He certainly was good to me when I was his prisoner, and it was



Why, he tossed a fat hickory nut so that it fell halfway between him and Chatterer.

he himself who let me go. I—I'd like ever and ever so much to go up to his house and have all the fat nuts I want without the trouble of hunting for them. I believe I'll run up to the edge of the Old Orchard and see if he is anywhere about."

Chatterer scampered down from the old apple tree and scurried along the Old Stone Wall in the direction of Farmer Brown's dooryard. When he reached the edge of it he very carefully peeped out. Farmer Brown's Boy was standing on the doorstep whistling. "Phoebe, Phoebe."

Chatterer knew right away that he was calling Tommy Tit, the Chickadee; and he was not surprised to hear a soft reply: "Phoe-be, dee, dee, dee, Phoe-be"—from the Old Orchard. A minute later Tommy Tit the Chickadee was helping himself to fat nut meats from the hand of Farmer Brown's Boy.

Now, this was more than Chatterer could stand. Why, Tommy Tit was just the teeniest, weeniest bird, just a little round ball of black and white feathers. And yet, he dared to do what all the other little forest and meadow people were afraid to do. Chatterer couldn't stand that. He ran out from the Old Stone Wall toward Farmer Brown's Boy and then stopped, with his heart going phapat, pitapat. Farmer Brown's Boy saw him right away, and what do you think he did? Why, he tossed a fat hickory nut so that it fell halfway between him and Chatterer.

"Dee, dee, dee! See me! See me! What are you afraid of, Mr. Fraidy?" called Tommy Tit.

Chatterer felt his mouth water as he looked with longing eyes at the fat hickory nut. And it hurt his pride to hear little Tommy Tit laughing at him. He suddenly shut his teeth with a snap and darted forward to the nut, and then with it held tight in his teeth raced back to the safety of the Old Stone Wall. Not until he was there did he dare to so much as look to see what Farmer Brown's Boy was doing. When he did look he found that Farmer Brown's Boy hadn't moved. He was smiling and, somehow, that smile made Chatterer suddenly feel very brave. No one with such a pleasant smile could be very bad at heart. Perhaps Tommy Tit was right, after all. He would think it all over and try again the next day

Chocolate Cake

By FRANK BENNETT
McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Features.

THE Rev. John Bivens, young, tall, thin and studiously bespectacled, eyed his neat handwritten notes anxiously and at the same time drew through thin nostrils the tantelizing aroma of freshly baked cake. It had been creeping into his study the entire morning, distracting him considerably from concentration on sermon No. 1. With great determination he applied himself to the work in hand. It was to be his introduction to Golnsville, and John, although young in years, was wise enough to know the value of the first impression.

Without warning the door behind him opened and Elsie, his wife of two weeks and four days, burst into his study. "John!" she cried, her voice that of one who knows sudden and unexpected success, "Oh, John, it's perfect! After two failures — I've — oh, John, you must come and look at it!"

John turned and smiled fondly at this pretty young lady with blond hair and sky-blue eyes whose face was flushed with wifely triumph. Remembering his sermon he sighed, but dutifully followed her into the kitchen to gaze with admiration at the beautiful cake. A great husbandly pride filled his heart, causing him to forget completely the two misshapen attempts which had preceded this masterpiece. And to ignore the ration points they had consumed. "Wonderful!" he said fervently.

"Thank you, my sweet." Elsie gave his hand a little pat. "I've done it all for you, just to produce the proper effect on the ladies. Now I must rush. There's a meeting of Circle No. 2, and I don't want to be late."

"Quite right," John agreed, convinced that no man was ever more fortunate in the selection of a wife than he. "I'll back the car out for you."

With the cake safely cradled in a large green basket, Elsie drove happily toward the church and the meeting of Circle No. 2. John returned hopefully to sermon No. 1.

Not many minutes passed before he heard a hearty knock. Frowning slightly at this second interruption, he opened the front door to find Mr. Boil, the local garage man, standing on the porch. On the driveway was Mr. Boil's wrecker; hitched to it was the front end of the old brown car. One glance told John that his ancient vehicle had been driven with considerable force into some more or less solid object.

Mr. Boil was without tact or imagination. "Your wife phoned me she run the ol' car into a bridge banister and that I was to come and pick up what was left. What do you want done with it?"

John Bivens struggled to speak coherently; there was a lump of fear in his throat. "My wife — was she injured?"

"Couldn't say. What about the junk pile?"

"Unhitch it, please." And the Rev. John Bivens, without hat, coat, or further thought of sermon No. 1, climbed aboard Mr. Boil's wrecker. "To the church, please," he directed. But his arrival at Circle No. 2 went unnoticed. The ladies were intent upon diminutive Mrs. Bivens who was beaming with delight. Her cheeks were pink with well-earned pride. Everyone seemed to be talking at once.

"What a beautiful cake!" "The best I ever tasted." "Your husband is a lucky man." "My dear, you are simply marvelous cook!"

Judging from appearances, Elsie was unharmed. Quietly, and still unseen, John returned to his study and his unfinished task.

On her return home Elsie found her husband of two weeks and four days with sermon No. 1 spread out before him, his face creased in deep thought. "Excuse me for bothering your, dear," she said. "I ran the car into a bridge banister. But I did it for you, my sweet. You see, I put the cake on the back seat. When it started to slide off, I had to choose between letting it fall and be ruined, or letting the car go its own way and saving the cake. I remembered the [illegible] impressions — so I rescued the cake. Did I do [illegible]

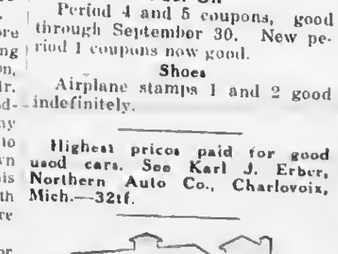
Fixing Up the Farm
by BURTON WILLIAMS

Keep Your Home in Repair

OFTEN—when making repairs around the farm home, the question isn't how to do it. The big stumbling block in the past frequently has been, "How can we pay for it?"

Fortunately, today that problem has been made far easier through the help of such agencies as the Federal Housing Administration. The FHA is celebrating its tenth anniversary this summer — ten years in which more than four and a half million owners of homes and farms have built or repaired their properties through FHA-insured loans amounting to more than one and a half billion dollars.



Of course, it isn't possible to do much new building now, but necessary home repairs can be made and financed under FHA plans. In fact, the government is encouraging farmers and other home owners to keep their homes in good shape. If your home needs fixing up, and you haven't the money immediately available to do it, see your local bank or other lending agency and you'll probably find that an FHA-insured loan can be arranged with little trouble.

CITY ICE SUPPLY IS RUNNING LOW

The local ice supply will soon become depleted if consumption continues at the present rate, warns Angus G. Leitch, city superintendent.

The same condition exists in other nearby towns where rationing has already begun. Most places restrict purchases to a maximum of 25 pounds in an effort to ride out the ice crisis.

A few suggestions which will help the situation are: If you pick up your own ice, get it into the box as quickly as possible, do not use ice to drinking water. Don't buy ice for picnics, etc.

Purchase only daily requirements of perishables. Refrigerate only the perishable articles. Do not place warm foods in the box. Shut the ice box door as quickly as possible. Share your refrigerator facilities with your neighbor. Commercial users should reexamine their absolutely essential needs and order accordingly.

Ella Sproule versus the "Horseless Carriage"

Miss Ella Sproule is a town legend. Never could get used to automobiles. Said there ought to be a law to ban the pesky things.

Finally, Miss Ella went to Bermuda where automobiles were outlawed. Then the Allies need bases there—and now Miss Ella watches jeeps whiz by and mutters, "There ought to be a law!"

Funny how certain folks, who don't like something, think it ought to be prohibited. Or else they try to run away from it, and it catches up with them—like Progress will.

Take the question of Prohibition versus Moderation. Even today, after Prohibition's dismal failure, you can hear well-meaning people say: "There ought to be another law."

From where I sit, there ought to be, instead, more facing of the facts—more realization that no law can ever take the place of tolerance and moderation, and decent law enforcement under proper regulation.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Turks Swing Closer to Allies As Nazi Lines Continue to Sag; Plentiful Food Supplies Seen

Released by Western Newspaper Union

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

EUROPE:
The War

Quivering under the assault of Allied forces, Germon lines buckled and gave all along the perimeter of Adolf Hitler's crumbling Fortress Europe.

In France, U. S. tanks and armored columns spearheaded a break from the narrow neck of the Cherbourg peninsula into the open country of Brittany to the south, chasing seven enemy divisions in their drive and bagging upwards of 30,000 prisoners. While the U. S. forces smashed into Brittany on the western end of the 100 mile French front, British troops took up the assault on the eastern flonk and pounded forward. As the Allies fought into the open country, leaving the tall, thick hedgerows and peaked hills behind them, they were in position to bring the full force of their mobile, armored equipment into play and slug it out with the foe.

As German commenintors emphasized the Russian numerical superiority on the eastern front since the Allied invasion of the west had necessitated the diversion of many divisions to that battle-sector, the Red avalanche rumbled further north and westward, threatening to cut off 300,000 Nazis in the Baltic states and engulfing the old Polish capital of Warsaw. Already half-way across prewar Poland, the Russian drive had come within 150 miles of Normandy—Bazooka team directs fire at entrenched enemy during heavy fighting in lightning U. S. advance.

Germany proper, with the Nazis trying to stabilize the sagging front along the lower Vistula river, where the Reds pressed to expand their bridgeheads.

In Italy, five German divisions fought viciously to stem the Allied approach to the vaunted "Gothic Line" below the famed art center of Florence, while farther to the west the enemy reportedly withdrew from the historic city of Pisa to the mountains above the municipality. As the two armies locked in combat about the "Gothic Line," the advantage still lay with the enemy, entrenched on the mountainous terrain and making full use of the rocky heights to pour artillery fire upon the advancing U. S., British, Canadian, French and Indian troops making up the Allied forces engaged in action.

DIPLOMACY:
Allied Gain

If the war was going well for the Allies on the battlefields, it was going equally well in the shimmering diplomatic ranks, with Turkey breaking off all relations with Germany short of war, and pro-Nazi President Risto Ryti of Finland turning over his office to popular, 77-year-old Marshal Baron Gustav Mannerheim.

Disposed to sit on the fence and make concessions to whatever side appeared to be gaining the upper hand on the battlefield, Turkey's rupture of all commercial and political relations with Germany indicated the growing success of Allied arms. Only after the Allies had promised to furnish protective aerial cover against possible German bombings did the Turks make the break.

Always for Finland first, Marshal Mannerheim took over the political reins of his country following ex-President Ryti's effort to hold the tiny nation in line behind his open declaration to stick the war out with Germany. Because Finland's abiding faith in his patriotism would enable him to weld all factions together, Moscow is reported to find him acceptable as head of a peace government.

Guam—Marine Captains Paul S. O'Neal, Brighton, Mass., and Milton F. Thompson, Upper Montclair, N. J., replant Old Glory on recaptured Guam.

PACIFIC:
New Strike

With U. S. forces under Adm. Chester Nimitz fighting through Japan's inner ring of fortifications within 1,500 miles of the enemy homeland, other American troops to the south under General MacArthur's command jumped to the far northwest corner of New Guinea to threaten the foe's first-line defenses guarding the rich treasures of the Indies region.

By hopping up the New Guinea coast to the northwest tip, the American troops by-passed the enemy garrison of 15,000 men at Monokwari, pursuing General MacArthur's policy of landing on the flanks of Japanese strongholds and isolating their defenders from neighboring lines.

As General MacArthur's forces secured the whole northern coast of New Guinea and approached to within 600 miles of the Philippines, Admiral Nimitz's naval and ground units pressed their conquest of Guam to the north with over 6,000 of the enemy's defenders counted dead in the U. S. drive.

FOOD:
Even Balance

Because of larger supplies of fresh fruits and vegetables and cereals, food stocks during the approaching fall and winter will be relatively plentiful despite decreases of at least 8 per cent in meats, the U. S. department of agriculture reported.

Despite large war requirements, the USDA said, food demands were being met by the record-breaking farm production, with 1943 volume 38 per cent above the 1935-'39 level, and 1944 output 5 per cent above last year.

Although production of farm machinery in June was the largest for the year ending in that month, the War Production board's overall program remained 11.3 per cent behind schedule, with manufacturers given another additional month to make up the deficit.

In addition, manufacturers have been given until September 30 to finish production of eight types of machinery lagging far behind schedule and including small combines, corn pickers, ensilage harvesters, peanut pickers, corn shellers and hay balers.

Although meat production is expected to reach the all-time high of 25 billion pounds this year, the greater portion was marketed during the first half of the year.

U. S. SERVICES:
6,000,000 Overseas

Of almost 11,000,000 men in the army and navy services on June 1, nearly 6,000,000 were on overseas duty, the war and navy departments announced, with substantial increases predicted before the end of the year.

Of 7,700,000 in the army, more than 4,000,000 were overseas, with the total expected to pass 5,000,000 by December 31. Of the navy's strength of 3,250,000, 1,566,000 were afloat or on foreign duty, with 900,000 men in transit or training for combat.

Indicative of the huge problem of supply connected with keeping the services in the field, army chiefs revealed that 63,000,000 tons of supplies have been shipped overseas since Pearl Harbor.

AGRICULTURE:
Potato Crop Suffers

With the prolonged drouth affecting the potato crop in the northeast, and small improvement expected in certain sectors even with rainfall, OPA granted growers an increase of 90 cents a bushel to bring returns from $3.30 to $3.65 per hundred pounds.

With the drouth general, potato production in the southeast also was reported to have suffered, and crops in Ohio, western New York and Long Island were said to be off 40 to 50 per cent. Despite recent rains, damage reportedly spread to Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas.

Fewer Lambs

High swirling snowdrifts, shortage of sheep herders, wolves and wild dogs were among the factors contributing to a heavy toll of lambs and ewes on the western ranges during the lost season, with estimates that only 78 lambs of every 100 ewes survived.

Popular since sheep raisers began marketing the animals early instead of waiting for two or three years as formerly when many people disliked the mutton flavor, lambs will be in smaller supply this year than last.

Despite the big death loss, however, western ranges were expected to market over half of the nation's lambs in the coming crop year.

Proudly They Serve

When Thelma A. Young joined the WAC in Philadelphia, Pa., she became the 19th member of the family to enter service. Five brothers have been killed in action in sectors varying from Bataan to Anzio.

Serving overseas are Mrs. Kathleen Young McBride, who is driving an ambulance in Great Britain; Mrs. Eileen Young Gallagher, British WRENS; Ensign Virginia Young Otto, navy nurses corps; Pharmacist's Mate Paul Young, on a hospital ship in the Pacific; First Lt. Gordon Young, a marine in New Guinea; Pvt. Ahlen Young in Italy; William and Phillip Young with a navy construction battalion in Iceland, and Machinist's Mate Edwin Young in the Mediterranean.

In this country are First Lt. Anne Young Barnett, WAC; Lt. Frances Young Crawford, WAVE; Sgt. Nancy Young Cooper, marine, and Yeoman Diana Young Centenaro, SPAR.

DDT:
Medical Weapon

Deadly when applied against lice, flies and fleas, the new insecticide DDT will soon be brought into use against the malaria bearing mosquito plaguing U. S. fighting men overseas, Maj. Gen. Norman T. Kirk, the army's surgeon-general, announced.

Impressed by DDT's effectiveness in checking a typhus epidemic spread by body lice in Naples, Italy, last winter, and its quick action when sprayed against insects, the army's present pre-occupation is in developing methods for applying the chemical against the malaria bearing mosquito.

DDT is the shortened form for the jaw-breaking term dichloro-diphenyl-trichlor-ethane, one of whose constituents is chloral-hydrate.

SURPLUS GOODS:
Disposal Progresses

With estimates that from 50 to 100 billion dollars worth of surplus goods would be available after the war, government authorities already have developed plans for disposing of the material without throwing the whole economic machine out of gear.

With more than 400 million dollars' worth of surplus goods already disposed of, the Office of War Information said, plans call for selling such material through sealed bids and auctions at about 75 per cent of cost to discourage speculators, and making the goods available in small lots for little business men.

One billion dollars of government defense housing also will be declared surplus after the war, it was said, and individual units will be offered separately if satisfactory bids for whole projects are not forthcoming.

ALIENS:
Number Decreases

Because of an increase in naturalization proceedings, a relatively high death rate resulting from their advanced age, and a sharp downturn in immigration, the number of aliens in the U. S. was reduced to 3,400,000 by June 30 of this year.

There were 5,000,000 aliens in the U. S. before the big decrease in their numbers got underway in 1940, with the all-time peak for naturalization set during the year ending last June with 435,483 new citizens.

With only 30,000 immigrants admitted into the country during the 12 month period ending last June, one alien came in for every 11 naturalized.

ROCKETS

Revelation that the U. S. navy is employing rocket projectiles on a huge scale came when it was announced that the naval ammunition procurement program would be doubled, with rockets accounting for most of the increase. Rocket projectiles of various sizes are being used to strafe enemy airfields, reduce strong points, clear beach heads, and to attack both surface and submarine craft. Rocket firing planes are operating in the Pacific, and to some extent in Europe.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

LIQUOR: The 31 day "holiday" from manufacturing industrial alcohol for war purposes that the WPB has granted distillers during August is being utilized by 121 companies to make whiskey. Eight other companies will continue using their full capacity to make industrial alcohol. The others have converted 50 per cent or less of their facilities to manufacture of beverage alcohol.

BRIDGE FALLS: The central span of a steel bridge across the Mississippi at Chester, Ill., has fallen into the channel, blocking water traffic. The bridge section is 650 feet long and 90 feet high. It was dislodged apparently by high winds.

PLANES TO RUSSIA: More than 10,000 American planes have been sent to Russia under lend-lease arrangements since October, 1941.

HOW LUMBER ORDERS APPLY TO FARMERS

New government restrictions on lumber, made effective August 1, will benefit essential users, including Michigan farmers, believes Richard C. Johnson of the Michigan State college forestry department.

Most farm uses of lumber are considered essential and carry a high priority rating. The new orders, by restricting non-essential use, will help farmers get lumber faster for necessary construction. Ways in which farmers may obtain lumber:

1. In each 3-month period, starting last July 1, a farmer may buy up to 300 board feet of lumber for essential farm uses from a lumberyard by signing a form at the lumberyard.

2. If more than 300 board feet are required in any 3-month period, the farmer should apply on WPB form PD-200 to his county agricultural agent or county war board.

3. If the structure for which lumber is needed will cost more than $1,000, the farmer should apply directly to his nearest War Production Board on WPB form 617.

4. In the event of fire, tornado, or flood, applications should be made to the county war board or to the nearest War Production Board. Emergency lumber to protect buildings from further damage might be available at the local lumberyard.

5. Farmers may take their chances with other consumers to get part of the five to eight thousand board feet of lumber allotted lumberyards priority-free for non-essential use.

The new orders also apply to custom sawing of lumber only if the mill cuts more than 100,000 board feet annually. To get logs sawed at those mills, the farmer must follow the procedure outlined above as if he were buying the lumber at a yard. Further information on buying lumber or arranging for custom sawing may be obtained from your county agricultural agent.

Fixing Up the Farm
by BURTON WILLIAMS

Watch Your Roofs

IT HAS been estimated that from 25 to 30 per cent of the nation's food supply is lost each year because of inadequate storage facilities. An important factor in preventing this loss of precious food is proper roofing. In winter or summer, the roof must bear the brunt of protecting crops from the elements. To do its job well, it must be in good repair.

Farmers who have suffered crop damage because of leaky roofs should make repairs immediately. Defective roofs are likely to become progressively worse. Many minor flaws are liable to develop into serious trouble. Small areas of damage, of course, can be repaired more easily than large ones.

Sometimes an inspection of the roof will indicate that complete reshingling is advisable. In such cases, care should be taken to see that the new roof is of fireproof or fire-resistant material. One of the most practical of the fireproof materials, and one now available, is asbestos cement.

Asbestos shingles are made of two durable minerals. They do not deteriorate with age, but instead become harder and tougher. No preservative treatment is ever needed, and there is no possibility of rotting, rusting or burning.

SAULT STE. MARIE — Here at one of the oldest and most-fabled points of North America, Sault Ste. Marie presents today—anno domini 1944—a convincing and powerful argument that the day of American military isolationism from Europe is forever gone.

The new meets the old amid dramatic surroundings.

Here at the first permanent settlement begun by Europeans in Michigan 200 years before Fort Dearborn was built among the wild onions that the Indians called "Chicago", is located the war department's headquarters for the air defense of 17 Mid-West states.

And only because the German luftwaffe has been beaten from the skies of Europe and the filthy Nazis are once more on the run in Normandy and Italy and on the Russian front, citizens of Sault Ste. Marie no longer view anti-aircraft balloons day after day and 18,000 volunteer airplane watchers no longer scan the northern skies, in shift round the clock, from northern Michigan to Labrador.

Returning to Sault Ste. Marie after a year's absence, this reporter was newly impressed with the strategic importance of this town of 13,000 souls along the St. Mary's river between Canada and the United States.

The war department released a news item at Washington a few days ago, telling how more than 10,000 American airplanes had been sent to Russia under lend-lease. Highly significant was this fact: Approximately 5,000 of these planes were flown to Russia over the northern circle route by way of Alaska! Delivery of Yank aircraft is being made in this manner — over the Bering sea between Alaska and Russia, a route hereto considered by the public as barred to air transportation because of natural hazards.

Modern air power has annihilated space.

Sault Ste. Marie, hub of the only international military zone on our North American continent, is proof of this truth.

It was our privilege, one year ago, to inspect the army air defense headquarters here at the Soo. Then the peril of German rains across the northern circle from Europe was a military reality. Throughout the Upper Peninsula and in many northern counties of Michigan, as well as hundreds of distant outposts in Canada's vast wilderness, volunteer airplane watchers were on the job, each hour of the day, ready to dispatch information by telephone to the Soo headquarters any minute an enemy plane was sighted.

Col. Norman M. Nelson, commanding officer, led us into the control room where uniformed Wacs were on duty to receive telephone messages and to place signal flags upon a large flat relief map.

On his desk was a small globe. Colonel Nelson picked it up. He pointed to Sault Ste. Marie.

"Here is the most direct route [illegible] United States. If an enemy [illegible] Lakes at the Soo [illegible] Mid-West — [illegible] elsewhere — [illegible] the Soo is our [illegible]"

[illegible] the city's ring of [illegible] the concrete [illegible] are wide as super-[illegible] we nodded to under-

It was Jacques Marquette, the [illegible] explorer-priest, who established the first settlement of [illegible] in Michigan at Sault Ste. Marie.

[illegible] have the ever-astonishing fact that this northern city antedates all but two cities on the North American continent and the only city in Michigan.

Father Marquette founded a church for 2,000 Indians who lived along the loud rapids of the river here. He had left France in 1668 at the age of 29. Marquette's arrival had been preceded by Etienne Brule, the first man to reach the northern lakes, who visited the rapids in 1612.

When the Jesuit priests first gazed upon this spot, they are said to have exclaimed "Sault" (falls) and later "Sainte Mary", believing that only the Blessed Virgin could possibly approach anything so beautiful.

To the north lies the Canadian Laurentians, for the most part a vast wilderness known to Canadians as the "bush."

The abundance of the whitefish in St. Mary's river, together with the availability of maple sugar at Sugar island, had provided a paradise for the Chippewas. To the west was Gitche Gumee, Lake Superior, the greatest body of fresh water in the world with a depth of 1,300 feet, 600 feet below sea level! This was the land of Hiawatha, made famous by Longfellow and first recorded by Henry Rowe Schoolcraft in his "Algic Researches."

The story of Sault Ste. Marie is the tale of an American northern frontier which saw in 1844, just a century ago, the sinking of the first shaft for copper at Copper Harbor in the Keweenaw peninsula.

The copper boom led to building of the Soo canal which was finished in 1855. Before the canal's completion, 15 large boats totaling 3,000 tons had been hauled over the portage (now Portage street.) Soo merchants opposed the canal because of the portage revenues, and so did the military at Fort Brady for selfish reasons. Henry Clay denounced the venture in Congress as "a work beyond the remotest settlement in the United States, if not in the moon."

Captain Eber Ward, largest owner of lake steamships in the 1850's, said the canal locks were "entirely too large" to be financed successfully.

In this summer of 1944 a ceaseless fleet of lake boats traverse through the St. Mary's locks carrying iron ore from the Mesabi, Gogebic and Marquette iron ranges and copper from the Keweenaw trap range at Houghton.

The armored might of American armies in France and Italy has been dependent, for the most part, on production of tanks and cannons and other mechanized equipment and munitions made out of steel and copper.

Here at Sault Ste. Marie is the vital artery through which go ore-carrying boats linking the mines to "arsenals of democracy."

Look at the globe, and you'll see for yourself why the United States must henceforth protect the Mid-West, as well as the strategic locks, from possible enemy air attack by maintaining strong defenses at the Michigan Soo.

This fact alone, indisputable in its logic, should add an attractive "lure" to Michigan's postwar tourist trade. The Soo locks thus become a symbol of American vigilance for security and peace.

Retirement to the Front

By KEN DAVIS

McClure Newspaper Syndicate WNU Features.

NUTS, Mr. War Correspondent! I don't want to talk about the fight we had out there today. The general does all our talking. Wasn't much to it, anyway. You gotta have something to write? Well, how about the time I yanked a general out of retirement? O. K.

I am the personal driver, see, for a general back in the States and a better boss never lived. Watta job!

"You stay in the office today, Rye, I may need you," the general barks this particular day when I pick him up. He omits his usual good morning so I figure something is eating him. You see, this is the day he is to retire. He hasn't been having much luck with his health for quite a while. Sorta been going downhill ever since his son left for overseas. Who is the son? Oh, everyone knows the captain. A fighter pilot. Quite a boy, too. Anyway. . . .

I sneak the morning paper and park in the corner of the old man's office, prepared for a dull day. But I don't even get it unfolded. The sir in that office gives you the willies. "Good morning, General," booms a voice suddenly, and I jump a foot. But it's only the colonel, not Gabriel's silver trumpet.

"What's good about it?" asks the general. "Last day in the army at sixty-one. And right in the middle of the biggest war this country's ever had. A pretty kettle of fish!"

Right away the colonel grabs the old nil can. "Now, now," he mcows.

"Sir, you shouldn't feel like that," the colonel mouths. "After all, you've had a long career. You've done your share."

The sting is gone, now, from his hard, tough growl.

The old man is a ramrod sort of guy—long, lean and as straight as the soldiers Hollywood casts as doormen. His hair is snow-white, but his eyebrows and military mustache are iron-gray.

"Colonel Stark," he says, deadly low. "Look at these blasted baubles. Victory medal from World War I. Mexican border service. American defense. A bloody desk general!" His voice rises a note. "My father was a fighting soldier in the Civil War. An uncle was cited at San Juan Hill in the Spanish business. And here I am, an old man, washed up—a failure."

The colonel stands still as a statue. "Stark," the general goes on wearily, "you've got to talk to someone. You've [illegible] with my son. I sent him over to fly against them Germans with never a toy bear but my own hope. No doubt he hates me. I've never heard from him. All I have, Stark, since [illegible] don't three years ago. Now [illegible] army doctors [illegible] what's why they're sending me to the boneyard. My body's all right."

The sting is gone now, from his hard, tough growl. So is his sudden anger. His indomitable head is like one who would stand under something. I look at the morning paper and there it is, right smack in my face. I let out a yelp which I can't hold in although I know I am taking my life in my hands. The old man has forgotten I am in the room. "It's all right, General," I cry, waving the sheet like mad. "It's all right."

I don't wait for them to bust me down to a guardhouse veteran. I just commence reading loud.

"Capt. Ted Horner, identified today as the pilot who two days ago shot down six of seven German bombers while flying cover for Fortresses, has been recommended for the Congressional Medal of Honor. 'I never could have done it except for Father,' the intrepid flier confessed with a boyish grin. 'Two or three times I thought I was gone, but I just reminded myself of what the old man would do to me if I let those Germans get away with it. That did the trick.'"

Quicker than a buck private grabs his pay, the general jumps up and snatches the paper from my hands. His face looks like he has a light bulb inside his head, so brilliant is his color. That's about all, I guess. Word about his kid fixed the old boy up, all right, and he came out of retirement like one of those bazooka shells the boys used up there today.

Who was the general? Didn't I tell you, Mr. Correspondent? Why, Major General Joshua M. Horner, of course, the guy who is running the show . . .

A Pock-Marked Jap Seaplane

U. S. marines at this captured harbor in the Marianas Islands examine the results of bombing and strafing of a Jap seaplane by American air men. The four-motored "Mavis" was one of several caught on the ground at the Jap seaplane base at Tanapag harbor. The number shot from the air has been considerable, but the Jap loss of planes destroyed on the ground has been enormous.

Brazilian Troops in Italy

The first contingent of Brazilian troops is shown arriving in Italy to take its place beside the American, British and French Allies in the fight against the common foe. A Yank guard of honor was on the dockside at Naples when the Brazilians disembarked. Brazil has asked that her troops be used on every front. Brazilian air troops have received training in U. S. and war workers of America have turned out a large volume of supplies for the South American troops.

Artificially Bred Stock Often Better

Plan to Restore European Herds

Postwar Europe's barnyard babies may never get to see their fathers.

Test-tube livestock breeding may, in fact, solve the problem of quickly rebuilding depleted herds and flocks in the war-devastated regions, according to a report issued this week by the American Foundation for Animal Health. This method of livestock breeding which was first developed on a broad scale in Russia, has already been used extensively in this country. To Europe it offers the advantage of avoiding the delays and transportation difficulties which would be involved in shipping breeding animals from this country to the reclaimed battle areas. Instead, male germ cells of various species of farm animals could be collected in this country, flown by fast planes to Europe, and used to fertilize cows, mares, and ewes of the devastated countries.

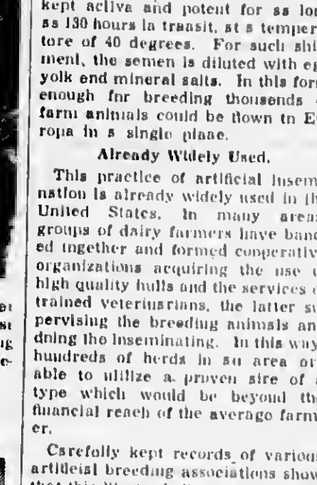
Experiments by American veterinarians have shown that male germ cells for breeding purposes can be kept active and potent for as long as 130 hours in transit, at a temperature of 40 degrees. For such shipment, the semen is diluted with egg yolk and mineral salts. In this form enough for breeding thousands of farm animals could be flown to Europe in a single plane.

Already Widely Used.

This practice of artificial insemination is already widely used in the United States. In many areas, groups of dairy farmers have banded together and formed cooperative organizations acquiring the use of high quality bulls and the services of trained veterinarians, the latter supervising the breeding animals and doing the inseminating. In this way, hundreds of herds in an area are able to utilize a proven sire of a type which would be beyond the financial reach of the average farmer.

Carefully kept records of various artificial breeding associations show that this "test tube" method may be actually more efficient than natural methods, producing a higher percentage of conceptions. Also, it has been shown that some of the test-tube heifers become better milk producers than their mothers.

Just how practical this application may be to postwar Europe's needs is indicated by the fact that a cow in Argentina was recently bred to a bull in Maryland, by the test-tube method.



Cleanliness around the separator is essential.

Deep Tillage Drains Off Swamps and Water Holes

"Water holes and temporary ponds on many farms can be drained by deep tillage practices, which includes the heavy application of lime on the surface or in the subsoil," advises C. M. Nissley of Rutgers U. "This makes conditions favorable for deep-rooted crops which help to open up the soil."

The practice would not be applicable to fields where the surface soil is underlaid with three or more feet of clay, however. Because of this, Nissley suggests that a hole three feet deep or deeper be dug in order to find out the character of the soil formation before remedial measures are put into practice. He also suggests that the county agricultural agent be consulted for additional advice on deep tillage practices.

Coming Home

By MARY W. KING

McClure Syndicate WNU Features.

MRS. PALFREY HOWARD II reached for one of the new genealogy volumes, and drew it from the shelf. There were five more records of her family and Palfrey II; a surprise gift for her soldier sons when they should come home with their fighting achievements to be added to the family records.

It was a proud old room, the library. Palfrey II viewed it from celestial regions, if at all, and the boys—one in Australia, the other on Guadalcanal—had not seen it since their mother had assembled the ancient family furnishings and hung the ancestral portraits.

As she opened the book, the cupboard door of her memory unlatched and a familiar chuckle slipped out. "At it again, old girl?" The chuckle and question were as natural as when Palfrey II had been a round earth dweller.

"I know, Palfrey, that pride in our New England lineage always amused you," Mrs. Palfrey answered aloud. "But surely the boys will care after this war. It's the thing they are fighting for!"

"Did you speak, ma'am?" the voice of her maid asked from the doorway.

"No, Mollie. What is it? Oh, you have letters! I hope they are from the boys!" She rose eagerly. "They are, Mollie! That's Pal's writing. The other's from Wiel I'd know his scrawl in Egypt. How wonderful to hear from them both at the same time!"

"It is indade, ma'am. I hope ye'll be findin' them both fine."

Mrs. Palfrey used a plebeian wire hairpin to slit the envelopes, ignoring the antique ivory cutter. Her lips moved as she read the first paragraph of each letter almost audibly. The maid lingered. "They are both safe, Mollie," Mrs. Palfrey announced soon, with happy tears in her eyes. She would read Pal's first—Palfrey Howard III, with the troops in Australia.

"Dear Mother:" (the letter ran)

"I'm O.K. Hope to come home on furlough. If our commander can arrange transportation. I've been in hospital. I'm all right now and I'm coming back to help finish this job as soon as I can carry a gun. Got a load in my shoulder, but it won't be long now.

"I have a surprise for you, Mother. I'm married to the sweetest Australian girl on the whole continent. Her name is Sidna. You'll love her, Mom. We might blow in any time. You'll be nice to Sidna, won't you? I'll have two weeks and then off to wherever Uncle Sam needs me most. We figured it this way, Sidna and I—we've both kept clean and straight, so we think we ought to raise some pretty fine kids to grow up in the new world, once we get it safe for them. Some fresh blood in the family, eh, Mom?

"Here's hoping we see you soon. I want you to know Sidna because we plan to settle in Australia when we've finished mopping up.

"Love,

"Pal."

The sheet dropped from Mrs. Palfrey's hand. Pal married! To an Australian girl! Planning to live in Australia! With trembling hands and half dazed, she drew out the second letter. Wait[illegible] her baby—bearing her father's name.

"Dear Mom:

Pal got a [illegible] to me and we hope to [illegible] the [illegible] Have been [illegible] the Japs [illegible] just [illegible]

"Say, Mom, [illegible] with [illegible] Marine [illegible] Sid Regan and like Officer. Also [illegible] brother, and Mom, you [illegible] And say, what a hell of a [illegible] little yellow [illegible] They don't come any finer than Mike and Abie. We're brothers forever. I want to show them what a home and a swell mother-in-law [illegible] They don't remember either. We could all stand some [illegible] See you soon, we hope. Of course we can't be sure.

"Love,

"Win."

Abie Levine! Mike O'[illegible]! Mrs. Palfrey was stunned. "We're brothers forever." She gazed into the leaping flames. Palfrey Howard III, whose ancestors had founded this country, married to a girl of unknown parentage. It did not occur to her to concede pioneer stock to a girl of another country. And Winthrop—fraternizing with the sons of immigrants!

The fire burned low. At last Mrs. Palfrey's jeweled hands were clasped, and she prayed softly, "Oh, God, I thank Thee that my boys are safe. Nothing else matters. But, God, help me to be as big as my boys!" She rose resolutely and rang for the maid. "You know, Mollie," she said, "I'm not so sure the boys will like this room after all. I think we'll bring back that etching Win always liked, and the lake pictures."

"Thim's more warmin'," the girl answered simply.

A half-hour later two messages winged into space in the hope that in some way they would reach her boys. One read, "Can't wait to get my arms around you and Sidna." The other, "Certainly bring Abie and Mike." Both were signed "Mother."

COURTESY TO THE

Stars & Stripes

With the American flag more and more in evidence because of wartime conditions, it is fitting that an increasing amount of attention be paid to flag etiquette. Pictured below, in preparation for the Fourth of July, are some of the "dos" and "don'ts" of flag display and courtesy.

● In the absence of a staff or pole, the United States flag is hung in this fashion when displayed from a home. The stars of the Union are uppermost and to the observer's left.

● Here is the correct saluting procedure. Note methods employed by civilians. The Boy Scout gives a three-fingered salute and the police officer a military salute.

● A definite "don't." It is absolutely incorrect and disrespectful to use the emblem as a tablecloth or decoration for the above speaker's table.

● It is just as disrespectful to place the flag over the hood of the automobile as shown here. This happens too often in patriotic parades.

during the closing days of July a total of 204 fires is reported for the month by the conservation department. Fire loss was 802 acres. Total loss in 913 fires so far this year is 12,614 acres as compared with 723 fires and a total loss of 18,563 acres in all of 1943.

About 22 million acres in northern Michigan — dominantly forest land — needs no additional attention so far as water conservation is concerned.

The function of th econservation department's fish division is to promote, protect, regulate and develop the fish resources of the state, and to foster and encourage the natural and artificial propagation of fish for food and recreational utilization.

Recent heavy rains over large sections of northern Michigan counties have improved prospects for a heavy crop of blackberries, now ripening on wild lands.

There can be no legal shooting of hen pheasants next fall.

The conservation commission or conservation department have no authority to change Michigan law to allow the taking of pheasant hens in areas where they are causing excessive damage. Such change in the law must be made by the legislature.

Today's statement by the department is its answer to demands that are being made, notably in Thumb areas, for liberalizing of the law next fall. Pheasant damage has been particularly heavy in Huron county.

State law limits department authority and responsibility to the establishing of seasons on muskrats, beaver, skunk, bear, waterfowl and deer in Allegan county. The department can, at its discretion, also reduce season lengths and bag limits. It can enlarge neither.

MICHIGAN HEALTH NEWS

By September 1 local dentists will have available a free diagnostic test of saliva which will greatly aid them in reducing the amount of dental decay. Announcement of this diagnostic service which the Michigan department of health will offer free to all dentists is made by Dr. William DeKleine, state commissioner of health.

For patients who have a high bacteria count, a special diet has been worked out. Copies of this will be furnished all dentists. For two weeks the patient eats no sugar, potatoes or bread. At the end of two weeks another saliva specimen is sent to the laboratories and potatoes and bread are returned to the diet . . . but no sugar. Following two weeks on this diet, a third saliva specimen is examined and if the lactobacillus count has not increased the patient may add a moderate amount of sugar to his meals.

Although scientists have searched for years for a way to prevent tooth decay this is the first method which has proved successful. It was worked out and tested at the University of Michigan School of Dentistry which has offered the diagnostic test to dentists for several years. The state health department hopes that making this test free will greatly increase its use both for children and adults.

CHECK ELECTRIC FENCE TO PREVENT TRAGEDY

Take no chances with home-made electric fence equipment, warns D. E. Wiant, associate professor of agricultural engineering, Michigan State College.

An electric fence energized or "kept hot" by means of a device that supplies a continuous current is highly dangerous to human and animal life.

Wiant cites three instances this summer in Michigan where persons met death through coming in contact with electric fences that were connected to a 110-volt lighting circuit. The farmers who were using these fences thought that the fences were safe because they had arranged at have the current flow through a light bulb of low wattage. Such fences are potentially deadly and should never be used, he warns. The effect of the continuous current is not to impart a warning sting but rather to give a paralyzing shock that may prevent a person or animal from pulling away from the wire.

Safe, commercially made electric fence energizers provide an interrupted current that gives a sharp sting to the person or animal touching the wire. Their reflexes immediately cause them to pull away involuntarily from the wire, unharmed.

Electric fences of a safe type and properly installed have demonstrated their worth in efficient farm operation. To prevent needless tragedies or loss of valuable livestock that in time might cause laws curbing the use of electric fences to be enacted, it is imperative that farmers install only equipment that is known to be safe.

VICTORY GARDEN SURVEY WILL BE MADE IN OCTOBER

A comprehensive survey of Michigan's 1944 Victory Gardens, as a basis for planning the 1945 programs of the State Victory Garden and Nutrition committees, is announced for early October by Paul R. Krone, Chief of the Victory Garden Section of the Michigan Office of Civilian Defense.

Local victory Garden committees will cooperate with the state committee by making surveys of the gardens in their districts, with the help of canvassers obtained through Civilian Defense Volunteer Offices, Neighborhood War Clubs, schools, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and garden clubs.

Special census cards for use by canvassers have been prepared and will be distributed to local Victory Garden chairmen about the middle of September. What will be obtained will include what crops were grown, size of garden, did the gardener grow food in 1943 and will he grow it in 1945 how much food per person was canned and how much stored, what method of preservation was used, and what was the approximate spoilage of food processed.

CHARLEVOIX COURIER

Volume 49 Number 34 Eight Pages Charlevoix, Michigan, Wednesday, August 23, 1944 In County $2.00 Per Year

CHRISTMAS MAIL FOR SERVICEMEN

Editor's Note: The following message from a soldier won a $50 prize offered by a Detroit radio station. The Courier reproduces it today because it contains information and advice of importance to our readers. It was written by Corporal Fred A. Sauer, 1025 Sheridan Drive, Kalamazoo, Michigan.

Mail from home is such a great booster of morale that it has become a military necessity

When mail from home arrives overseas, the postal clerks stay on the job, sorting, until all of it is ready for distribution. They know how badly the men want their mail.

An officer of the Army Postal Service reports that "In the middle of battle, with stuff dropping all around them, men will put the mail-call ahead of the mess-call." A Navy skipper's remarks are: "If I had to choose between taking aboard fresh food or mail, I'd take mail everytime. The boys seem to manage when food is scarce, but being short-rationed on mail really gets them down.

Here are the official rules issued by Postmaster-General Walker far mailing Chirstmas, 1944, packages. The mailing period for both Army and Navy overseas forces is the same — September 15 to October 15. After October 15, no gift parcel may be mailed to a saldier without the presentation of a written request from him. But this does not apply to other branches of the Service.

Parcels must not weigh more than five pounds nor exceed 15 inches in length. Furthermore, they must not be more than 36 inches in combined length and girth. This is about the size of an ordinary shoe box. However, shoe boxes should not be used.

Packages should be marked "Christmas Parcel" to insure special handling and they should be packed well to prevent damage. Inflammable materials, perishable goods and intoxicants are not allowed.

Good rules for wrapping packages to Servicemen are:

Use strong boxes—metal, wood or fiberboard boxes are prefer-

2nd Lt. D. Iris Dodd Somewhere In England

Mrs. Harry Elzinga, former Charlevoix resident now residing in Detroit, sent the following letter received recently from her daughter, 2nd Lt. D. Iris Dodd of the Army Nurses Corps, stationed somewhere in England. Anyone desiring her address may call at the Courier office as we can not print overseas addresses. Excerpts from the letter fallows:

"I'm afraid you sounded a little sad and worried about our safety over here. So far that isn't necessary, for there is no danger where we are. Somehow we are just out of range of the pilotless planes which are doing so much damage over here. It will be a happy day when they can control those things.

Things are much different around here now. We are taking care of battle casualties a few days after they are injured. There are many with fractures or gunshot wounds. A good percentage of them are badly hart in several places. But they are a game bunch and only regret that they haven't done more harm to the Jerries and those snipers they're always talking about.

We are all very busy working around 12 hours a day or more with the surgical crews working about 18 hours at a stretch. The patients are given first aid and casts and dressings are applied but not much else besides emergency care. They pass through the first

Cpl. Douglas W .Bird, of the Allied Liaison Service, stationed in the Mediterranean area writes the following letter:

To the Citizens of Charlevoix:

I would like to take this opportunity to extend my sincere thanks to the Citizens of Charlevoix for making me one of their Honorary Citizens. It was a great thrill ta me when I received this card from the C.S.O., to know that the people back home still think of us who are so far away. It is this thought and knowledge that give us the inspiration to help end this present struggle and return to our homes and friends. Have not forgotten the cards, letters and the "Courier" which individuals and clubs have forwarded to me.

With the suppart you people on the home front have given, we fellows overseas hope to do our bit towards determining an early Victory. Thanks again for your interests and I assure you we will not let you down.

America's Answer to Nazi—Rocket Projectiles

Loading Projectile

Yank shown loading a projectile into the rocket armament of the far wing of the P-47 Thunderbolt. Arrows indicate the rocket projectiles, one on each side of the Thunderbolt. Nazis complain that the new rocket is "unfair" and does not give them sufficient opportunity to get under cover. U. S. army officials report that its effect will be increased.

Rocket Armament of P-47

P-47 Thunderbolt has eight deadly .50-caliber machine guns in addition to the new rocket gun armament. Special training has been given the ground crew as well as members who operate the rocket guns.

America's answer to the Nazi flying bomb has been the further development of the new rocket gun armament on the huge P-47, which not only can do as much damage as the flying bomb, but actually does many times as much, for the bombs can be accurately placed.

The Charlevoix Service Organization (C.S.O.) has now functioned for over two and a half years, integrating our City's prosecution of the War Effort. And it has functioned well. We are proud of our accomplishments.

Over 500 boys and girls have left this section of the County to enter Uncle Sam's service. The Charlevoix Service Organization has sent them away with fitting ceremonies and armed with a farewell gift of some sort. When those in the Service come home on leave or furlough and cannot reach their respective homes the CSO is right on the job to see that they receive transportation. Many have been stranded while in Charlevoix and have been fed and housed for the night.

Charlevoix boys and girls who have been hospitalized in various parts of the country have been sent boxes to cheer them up. And biggest of all each boy and girl in the service from Charlevoix and adjacent rural areas have been sent the weekly paper free of charge.

Our organization also sponsors entertainment for the local coast guard recreation room and plans are being made to purchase further equipment for the off duty time of those boys stationed here.

Every boy and girl in the service from Charlevoix and adjacent rural areas have been honored as an outstanding citizen through the presentation of a Certificate of Recognition.

All these and many smaller items are the work of the Charlevoix Service Organization, known as the CSO. We are not afraid to boast. Through the continued cooperation of all the citizens of Charlevoix, and of the citizens in be, we feel that we are 100% in the War Effort, working through the CSO.

Church of God Gives Dedication Sunday A. M.

A church bell given to the Church of God in remembrance of the late William C. Palmer by his family was dedicated in a special service at the church at 11 o'clock Sunday morning. The Rev. Richard Struthers, of Plymouth, spoke at the service. A poem "How Willie Was Saved", written by the late Mr. Palmer when he was a college student, was read by Mrs. W. H. Wood. The Rev. Wood spoke on the life of Mr. Palmer, dwelling chiefly on his work in the church.

The congregation then stood and the bell was rung for the first time. The service closed with a prayer by Rev. Wood.

Mrs. Palmer who is now making her home in Barryton and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Benjamin Palmer, were present for the dedication services.

INSURE POTATO YIELD BY SPRAY PROGRAM

Keep potato plants well covered with bordeoux mixturo or one of the fixed copper sprays thruout the rest of the growing seuson to insure maximum productian, urges H .C. Moore, pototo speciulist, Michigan State college.

Regular sprays to control eurly und late blight and leafhoppers during the latter purt of the growing sensom are important becausa dnring these last, final weeks, ahout 70 per cent of the yiehl is made.

To prevent losses, fullow this program:

1. Spray with bordeaux mixture or one of the fixed coppor compounds every 6 or 7 dnys during the rest of the growing season. Use a high-pressure sprayer, delivering 300 pounds or more pressure. Apply 125 gallons or more of bordeaux per acre.

2. Muke certain that the plants are thoronghly covered .Top nozzles should be adjusted so that all new growth is protected. In fields where the plants have made vigorous growth, four nozzles should be used for each raw—two to cover the sides and two for the top of the row.

3. Where the plants aro large and are crowding, vine-turners placed in frant of the tructor and sprayer wheels will help to prevent injury to plants.

Conditions in some sections of Michigun are favorahle for the spreal of late hlight. With the coming of the usunl enrly fall rains, the situation will become more serious. Even though potatoes in drnught areas may escape blight damage, there is a need te control leafhoppers, which have been especially serious this season in misny parts af the state.

In the case of small patches and where the equipment is availnble, farmers may apply a dusting program, following the general features of procedure as outlined for spraying.

Detailed information un either spraying or dusting petatoes mny be obtained from the local county extension office or from Extonsion Hulletin E-49, Michlgun State college Bulletin Office, East Lansing.

PROTECT MUCK FROM FIRE

Drought conditions in many parts of Michigan maku it imperative thut extruordinory precantions be taken to avoid muck soil fires, causod oither throngh curelessnoss on the purt of smokers or through the starting af bonfires on or near mnck soil, warns Paul C. Harmer, muck soil specinlist, Michigan State college.

Burning of muck soil generally results in the loss of the aurface soil, which is the most valuable part of the muck and in the production of large holes burned in the ground where the fire may continue for several weeks. Usually, an nlkaline renction is produced, making the soil unproductive, and the level of the soil is reduced, making it more difficult to obtain satisfactory drainage.

Muck land supporting a wild growth is more likely to hurn than is tint which is growing crops.

Picture Story of U. S. Flag

THE FIRST STARS AND STRIPES

This is the first Stars and Stripes. The Continental Congress on June 14, 1777, resolved: "That the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, red and white; that the Union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation." According to legend the five-pointed stars were designed by Mrs. Betsy Ross.

FIFTEEN STARS AND STRIPES

With the admission of Vermont and Kentucky to the Union two stars and two stripes were added to the flag following an Act of Congress in 1794. It was a flag of 15 stars and 15 stripes over Ft. McHenry that inspired Francis Scott Key to write "The Star-Spangled Banner." Congress in 1818 restored the original number of stripes.

Old Joe said to Young Joe . . .

". . . when you get over there in the thick of it, son, you won't have time to think about the fancy ideals you're supposed to be fighting for. You'll be interested mostly in shooting straight, and shooting first.

"But some night when you're lying out under the stars, you'll probably figure the whole thing out—and it will be very simple.

"You'll realize that you're fighting to protect the kind of decency and freedom you were raised in—and will want to raise your kids in, too.

"You'll be fighting to protect the opportunity that all Americans have of starting at the bottom and getting to the top—and that's typically American.

"You're fighting to protect your right to live your own life in your own way without being pushed around by some bright young bureaucrat who wants to do all your planning for you.

"That's about all there is to it, son. But it's mighty worth while—this business of keeping our freedom—of sticking to the things that have made America great.

"I've often thought that our own family was a pretty good example of what can happen in this country—and nowhere else. I started as a chore boy on this very farm, when I was ten years old. Made up my mind I'd own it some day. Nothing in the world to stop me—if I really wanted it.

"We didn't have good roads in those days. No cars or trucks or tractors. No radios. No airplanes. No telephones, movies, or electric lights.

"I didn't have much education—didn't have the time or money to get it. But I made up my mind that my own children would have some of the things I didn't have.

"You've had a good education. You went to agricultural college. You've traveled around the country in your car. You've seen how the other fellow lives and runs his farm. You keep up to date through your radio, your reading—and your various farm associations.

"And, son, it's hard to believe that most of the inventions, advantages and improvements that have made you more efficient and more comfortable, have happened in my lifetime.

"But that's the very thing I'm talking about. That's the power of America. We've got push in this country—and ingenuity—the determination to keep on getting stronger and better all the time. And all of us have got to see that nothing stops that kind of progress—neither enemies from the outside, nor from the inside.

"You're a chip off the old block, son. You think about the way I do. You work hard—very hard. But you've had more advantages than I had. And you're a better man in every way. You'll go farther.

"You're the new type of American farmer. You're running a business when you farm today. It's a mighty important business too—and you've got to know your stuff.

"Just remember this, my boy—you're a free agent. Your future is under your hat. You have seen what our American way of doing things has meant to you and me and millions of others, in opportunity, progress and happiness. That's what you're really fighting for, son. You put the heat on, over there—and I'll put it on over here."

DRUMMOND ISLAND — On rocky Drummand Island, forgatten apparently hy hath fodarul and state governments and unmarked by oven a simple historicnl tablet, nre the crumbling ruins of old Fort Drummond, once garrisoned by 350 to 400 red-coated British troops far 13 years after the War of 1812.

This historic fort, an picturesque Whitney bay at the southwestern promontory of Drummond Island, could readily hecome one of the Upper Peninsula's varied tourist attractions. At Copper Harbor, ont near the end of Keweenaw peninsuin, is Fort Wilkins, built just a century ago —May 28, 1844—as protection against the Indians. Snult Ste. Marie has its Fort Brady, established in 1822.

At the north end of Potagannissing Bay, just east of Drummond Island ,is St. Joseph Island with its carefully marked and preserved ruins of old Fort St. Joseph. The ruins there are marked by the Canadian historicnl sites and monuments commission.

To the south and east, only 50 miles away, is the famous Fort Mackinac, the object of solicitous care by the Mackinac Island Park Commission. Even old Fort Michilimackinac, nt the City of Mackinaw, has hean reconstructed accurately by the state for education af young and old.

Because Drummond Island is off the beaten path, accessible to travelers only hy ferry fram the village of De Tour, the British fort has been permitted thraugh public indifference to become private property of summer resorters. When you visit the old ruins you do so at their consent.

Drummond Island, next door to Canada, is where the St. Mary's river empties into the blue waters of Lake Huron.

Here is the "Strnits country", much af it wild and rough.

For years we had hoped to be able to visit Drummond, but it was not until this August that we had the opportunity to do so, The state conservation department was sending a patrol bout into Potagannissing Bay. A Chaboygan fisherman was reported to be netting fish illegally. And since the bay has been closed tn nata, the vigilant conservation department was interested in the violation.

The patrol boat's crew consisted of Alex MacLenn, assistnnt district supervisor and Frank Brenza, fire warden for Drummond Island. Among the travelling guests were C. A. Pacquin of the Lansing office and Webb McCall, a newspaper publisher from Mt. Pleasant.

The day's trip had begun most auspiciously. The sky was deep blue and almost cloudless, while the temperature was in the lower 70's.

After n morning' inspection cruise, we stopped nt the village af Drumminnd — the only incorporated place on the islnnd's 87,000 acres of land — for n luncheon nt the Potngannissing Inn, aperated by Miss Leah Senmnn. Miss Senmnn is n spinster lady af nbaut 65 nnd n descendant of the earliest settler, n Mormon minister who enme to the Islnnd about the time the Mormons were driven from Beaver Island in 1857.

Here at the village is an old nbandoned quarry whera stones were obtnined for the first canal locks at Snult Ste. Mnrie in the late 1870's.

Nenrby nre some 40 islands, both large and small. About half of them are inhabited by summer resorters. One island, 200 ncres in size, was purchnsed in 1943 by an ex-Grand Rapids bnotlegger for $800.

The owner knifed a hunter in n tavern brawl last fnll, and was said to he in jnil nt the Soo awaiting trial.

The patrol boat chancad to cruise near St. Joseph Island in Cnnadn, and we prevailed upon the crew to stop a minute for an inspection of the ruins of Fort St. Joseph.

Running the boat up close to the shore, we all waded nshnre, carrying shoes and socks, and proceeded to look over the stone walls and masonry thnt once marked the most westerly British fort on the North American continent. Raspberries and gooseberries were ripe — reminders of the once busy settlement from 1796 to 1812.

It was from this spot that Cnptain Charles Roberts organized the British expedition thnt took Fort Mackinac by surprisa on July 17, 1812.

Fort St. Joseph was established by the British following the Ravolutionnry Wnr. In July, 1796, they withdrew from Detroit. In August they evacunted Fort Mackinac. After the wnr of 1812 broke out, Amerleans raided the fort and burned it. And so, when the Treaty of Ghent had officially terminnted the Wnr of 1812, the British selected Whitney bny on Drummond Island ns being more accessible for the Indians. They made a poor guess, as Drummond island, named in honor of Sir Gordon Drummond, the Cnnadian lieutenant governor, became Amerlcnn territory, while St. Joseph islnnd was included in Canada.

One of the interesting ruins of old Fort Drummond is its British military cemetery. Nailed to a tree is a plain wood board, upon which a resorter has painted the words, "British cemetery."

The burying ground was once fenced in by hand-hewn cedar posts, placed about four inches apart. A ditch was dug on all four sides, 100 hy 150 feet in size.

Today there stands only six of the original cedar posts. The others, decaying, have been stacked in piles.

Grave stones have fallen, and of the original wood markers, only one is left.

A summer resort owner has used the great chimney of a British officer's quarters as the chimney for his log cabin. Once the military settlement had its own park. Cabin lots were 50 by 100 feet. Eighteen buildings comprised the garrison itself which onve housed from 350 to 400 men exclusive of Indians.

Nearby are the artillery road and the parade grounds.

The quiet waters of Whitney Bay were once alive with Indian canoes, for 4,500 Indians and their families would gather at Drummond island each spring to receive gifts of the British and to swap their furs for rum and other products.

Since 1828, when the British troops sailed for Penetanguishene on Georgian Bay, old Fort Drummond has been left to crumble in decay.

It awaits the enterprise of the state conservation department or some other interested agency to preserve it as a monument or a state park, a permanent shrine of the last British fort in Michigan and another milestone in our American history of the winning af the west. This opportunity has been neglected long enough.

Pin-Up Girl

By BESSIE J. DOENGES

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

THE sands of the desert were growing cold. The sudden drop in temperature still came each night as a shock to Corporal Hank Jones, veteran of six months' fighting. He had known defeat, had seen the Stars and Stripes pulled down and the Swastika flying over the hill where he had camped the night before; he had lost track of time and the orderly sequence of day and night. The men who fought beside him were closer than brothers because of those who were no longer there. And now he was knowing victory—all day he had seen the German troops come down the road to surrender. They were all over the place. Some waved leaflets that the British had dropped promising good food and fair treatment. They were giving up by the tens of thousands, arriving on foot, in jeeps, in trucks, in tanks.

Hank's thoughts turned to Prue and the baby born after his departure. If only he could see little Anita just once, before she grew out of her babyhood!

Prue wrote every day. He remembered the morning shortly after he landed that he received a batch of thirty-two letters, twenty-seven from Prue. He carried them around for a whole half-hour anticipating the pleasure of reading them.

He glanced up and stared at the colored picture of a perfectly beautiful baby on the cover of a magazine on Jerry's bed. The child had a doll-like head, plump rosy cheeks and mischievous blue eyes. Its hair was golden-red, parted on the side and tied with a blue bow. She looked so much alive that it seemed as if she were about to laugh.

Why, this might be Anita!

Hank's tongue curled up over his teeth as a thought struck him. Why, this might be Anita! Prue had told him: "You needn't worry about our finances: Anita is supporting me in the style to which I am accustomed. I took her to a model agency and everyone there raved about her. She is averaging fifty dollars a week. I have moved near the studio and nearly every day our little darling is photographed. The camera men say they've never seen such hair and eyes."

The description fitted perfectly, and the age noted—ten months seemed about right. But he was crazy—there was no reason to believe this was Anita, he just wanted to think so. There was no resemblance to Prue or any other member of the family, except that the little glimmering smile was like Grandma Nelson's. Picking it up, Hank found that the magazine was three months old. Anita wasn't even modeling then, and she certainly wasn't that big. Impatiently, he threw the monthly on the adjoining bunk.

Jerry said, "We've got to pin up some pictures—we'll probably be here for a while." He examined the cover of the periodical. "You'll make a nice pin-up girl," he said.

Tacked to the canvas, the little girl looked at the boys with interested, alert eyes, the impish smile curving the corners of her mouth. "She looks like somebody," said Jerry, half to himself. Then, "Why, she looks like Hank! Don't that baby look like Hank, fellahs?"

They all gathered around, looking from Hank to the wall, exclaiming on the likeness of hair, eyebrows and —mockingly—of dimpled chin. He wanted to tell them that it might be his kid, but it would sound too foolish. He couldn't write his letter now. He glanced through the table of contents of the magazine. There he read, "Frontispiece: The young lady on the cover is Miss Anita Jones of New York City, aged six months. Her father is with the armed forces in Africa."

"It's the spit 'n' image of Hank," said Fitz. "We'll call her Hank Second, and make her our mascot."

He began a new letter to Prue. "Dear Skip," he wrote. "I wished on the new moon tonight. I wished for something impossible, and yet—"

He couldn't put his feelings on paper, somehow. All he wanted was to stare at his little daughter. He tried to envisage her big enough to take her first step, to have a funny tooth or two in front. Some day when the boys weren't there he would kiss her—but he'd have to be sure he was alone.

Silence was falling on Northern Africa. The campaign was over and he was that much nearer home.

CHATTERER DECIDES TO LIVE

AT FIRST, Chatterer the Red Squirrel decided that he would rather die than live in a prison, no matter how nice that prison might be. It was a very foolish thing to do, but he made up his mind that he just wouldn't eat. He wouldn't touch that nice yellow corn Farmer Brown's Boy had put in his prison for him. He would starve himself to death. Yes sir he would starve himself to death. So when he found that there was no way to get out of his prison, he crept up to the little hollow stump where no one could see him and curled up in it and that he would stay there until he died. Life wasn't worth living if he had to spend all the rest of his days in a prison. He wouldn't even make himself comfortable. There was a little heap of nice soft rags and lots of rag for him to make a nice comfortable bed, but he didn't touch them. No, sir, he just tried to make himself miserable.

Not once that long day did he poke as much as the tip of his nose out af his little round doorway. Ever so many times Farmer Brown's Boy came to see him and whistled and called softly to him, but Chatterer didn't make a sound. At last, night came and the woodshed where his prison was grew darker and darker and very still. Now, it was about this time that Chatterer's stomach began to make itself felt. Chatterer tried not to notice it, but his stomach would be noticed and Chatterer couldn't help himself. His stomach was empty and it kept telling him so.

"I'm going to starve to death," said Chatterer to himself over and over.

"I'm empty and there is plenty of food to fill me up, if you'll only stop being silly," whispered his stomach.

The more Chatterer tried not to think of how good something to eat would taste the more he did think of it. It made him restless and uneasy. He twisted and squirmed and turned. At last, he decided that he would have one more look to see if he couldn't find some way to get out of his prison. He poked his head out of the little round doorway. All was still and dark. He listened, but not a sound could he hear. Then he softly crept out and hurriedly examined all the inside of the prison once more. It was of no use. There wasn't a single place where he could use his sharp teeth.

"There's that little pile of corn waiting for me," whispered his stomach.

"I'll never touch it!" said Chatterer fiercely.

Just then he hit something with his foot and it rolled. He picked it up and then put it down again. It was a nut, a plump hickory nut. Two or three times he picked it up and put it down, and each time it was harder than before to put it down.

"I-I I'd like to taste one more nut before I starve to death," muttered Chatterer, and almost without knowing it he began to gnaw the hard shell. When that nut was finished he found another, and when that was gone still another. Then he just had to taste a grain of corn. The first thing Chatterer knew the nuts and corn were all gone and his stomach was full. Somehow he felt ever so much better. He didn't feel like starving to death.

"I-I believe I'll wait a bit and see what happens," said he to himself. "And while I'm waiting I might as well be comfortable."

With that he began to carry the shavings and rags into the hollow stump, and soon he had as comfortable a bed as ever he had slept on. Chatterer had decided to live.

How Different Will be Post-war Homes?

Matt Donrly, our local carpentor, has been showing us architect's drawings of the kind of post-war houses that we're going to live in. Some of them look like squared-off dominoes; some are streamlined like they were going to fly. And they're all filled with fancy things like air-conditioning and what-not.

"Sure change our home life!" Matt says importantly.

"Shucks," says Dan Mason, "It isn't the shape of a house, or the gadgets in it, that make up your home life."

"What is it then?" says Matt.

"It's the little things," says Dan. "Like a well-worn chair before the fire—and a good book—and a friendly glass of beer after a hard day's work. Little things, that are a part of living."

From where I sit, Dan's absolutely right. And I think the men who dream of home from overseas agree—that it's the small, familiar pleasures, that add up to home.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Allied Drive Draws Near Paris; Nazis Put Torch to Homeland; Senate Debates Postwar Relief

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Pacific—With motor transportation lacking, Yanks use native ox carts to haul heavy ammunition to Tinian front.

EUROPE:
Enemy Gives

As Brittany's four big sea-bases of Brest, St. Malo, Lorient and St. Nazaire came under the muzzles of American siege guns, other Allied forces pressed their thundering offensive aimed at Paris.

Their defense lines in Brittany shattered before the lightning advance of the American armored columns, stubborn German detachments squeezed within the limits of the four big bases put up a furious last ditch fight against the crushing weight of the attackers.

While the bases were being reduced, other American forces, striking out eastward to within 100 miles of Paris, came upon the big communications hub of Le Mans. To the north of them, the enemy was covering a retreat with strong armored forces in constant counter-attack.

As the Allied drive rolled up the Nazi line to the west and north, German forces also gave ground below bloodied Caen to the east, with Canadian troops punching holes in the enemy defenses after terrific aerial bombardment by U. S. and British planes.

As Russian forces pressed an East Prussia, men, women and children of that stronghold of German militarism were mobilized to assist Nazi armies, and houses, farms and other installations were razed to prevent their use by the Reds.

In the center of the flaming eastern front, the Nazis bitterly resisted Russian advances upon the prewar Polish capital of Warsaw, throwing strong armored forces into the surrounding plains to contain the surging Red troops.

Farther to the south, the Russians were within 100 miles of the Germans' eastern industrial province of Silesia, and already had overrun the Polish oil-fields which formerly supplied the Nazis with about 2 per cent of their crude.

In Italy, U. S., British, New Zealand and South African troops making up the Fifth and Eighth armies poised for an assault upon the enemy's vaunted "Gothic Line" in the hills north of the Arno river.

Although the historic art center of Florence was spared the war's destruction, the opposing armies lined up on either side of the famed city for a death struggle, with big German guns in the hills to the north lobbing shells on Allied troops massing for an all-out attack.

WORLD WHEAT:
U. S. Leads

With large increases in the U. S. and Canada offsetting decreases elsewhere, world wheat production this year may be moderately above last year, the U. S. department of agriculture reported.

Of the big four wheat producing countries, only the U. S., with 1,128,000,000 bushels, and Canada, with 175,000,000, are expected to show an increase in output, with Australian and Argentine harvests about the same as last year.

Because of shortages of fertilizer and manpower, European production is expected to drop below last year's, although certain sections like Great Britain and parts of the Balkans are looked upon to harvest above average crops. India's harvest was expected to drop to 368,000,000 bushels.

Despite a 600,000,000 bushel reduction in stocks over the previous year, world wheat supplies approximated 1,140,000,000 bushels in July, far above the 1935-'39 average of 457,000,000 bushels. The big decrease reflected increased use of the grain as feed in the U. S.

LIVING COSTS

The cost of living moved up slightly during June in 33 cities out of the 33 surveyed by the National Industrial Conference board. In seven cities costs remained unchanged, and in 23 there were small declines. For the nation as a whole, living expenses were practically unchanged. The largest increase was found in Indianapolis, where a rise of 1.3 per cent was calculated. Next came Cincinnati with 1.2 per cent, and Dayton, 1.1 per cent. The greatest decline was in Newark, N. J.

DEMOBILIZATION:
Senate Fight

Sen. George

With increasing interest focused on the country's changeover from a war to a peacetime industrial basis after the termination of hostilities, U. S. senators considered legislation to place government workers in shipyards, arsenals and other activities under state unemployment compensation systems, with the states free to establish their own rates of payments up to $20 a week with federal aid, if needed.

Introduced by Senator George (Ga.), the legislation was offered in place of another proposal, which would set up unemployment benefits of as much as $35 a week to demobilized war workers, deny payments if they refused to accept jobs offered by the U. S., and provide up to six months vocational training with a maximum subsistence allowance of $75 a month.

Claiming the latter proposal would maintain huge postwar deficits, invade states' rights over unemployment compensation and subject U. S. workmen to government dictation, a coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats backed the George measure.

PACIFIC:
Nearer Tokyo

Ploughing defiantly through the rolling Pacific, U. S. warships sailed within 600 miles of Tokyo to raze the port center of Omura in the Bonin islands, while American carrier planes struck hard at enemy shipping in the vicinity.

The sea and air strikes around the Bonins coincided with other U. S. aerial assaults upon the whole range of Japanese defenses guarding the homeland, with planes ripping enemy installations on Parameshiro to the north and blasting Wake and the phosphate center of Nauru to the south.

With 10,000 Japanese already counted dead, marines closed in on the enemy's last foothold on the northeast tip of Guam, where he had been steadily forced back under the relentless pressure of American forces.

LEND-LEASE:
Review Needs

As the government reviewed the whole lend-lease and military food situation as a result of favorable developments abroad, the National Association of Manufacturers revealed that British leaders were insisting upon continuance of lend-lease after the war in Europe, and possibly Asia, to bolster that country's internal economy.

Prompting the review of food needs which might result in increased allotments to U. S. civilians, were the army's huge supplies built up for a long war that may end sooner than expected; the vast stockpiles laying in Great Britain, and the apparent plentiful reserves in occupied Europe.

In asking for continuance of lend-lease after the end of hostilities, British leaders were said to have pointed out that the war's reduction of their world trade by 50 per cent and a 50 per cent decrease in their foreign investments to pay for military supplies, the country would be severely hampered in getting back on its feet unless assistance were forthcoming. The National Association of Manufacturers, on the other hand, declared that while the U. S. debt neared 300 billion dollars, Britain's was only 75 billion.

MISCELLANY

FISH: More fish is in cold storage warehouses now than at any time in history for this season, the Office of the Coordinator of Fisheries reports. Stocks on hand totaled 90,000,000 pounds, an increase of 50 per cent over the same date in 1943. There is concern in the industry over lack of storage space to handle the large volume usually caught in the autumn.

CASUALTIES:
Costly Fighting

In a month and a half of bitter fighting in France, Allied casualties totaled 115,655, of which American losses numbered 11,026 killed, 52,669 wounded and 5,831 missing.

Second to the U. S. were British casualties, with 5,646 killed, 27,766 wounded and 6,182 missing, while Canadian losses totaled 910 killed, 4,354 wounded and 1,272 missing.

Not long after Lieut.-Gen. Lesley McNair had been killed at the front in France by a bomb which an American airman released accidentally behind U. S. lines, his only son, Douglas McNair, 37, met his death during the reconquest of Guam. Like his father, young McNair was a field artillery man.

On the basis of Prime Minister Churchill's statement that losses among the Allies were proportionately the same, casualty figures would indicate that Americans composed 60 per cent of the troops in France, the British 34.4 per cent, and the Canadians 5.6 per cent. When the invasion began, the number of troops was about equally divided.

CIVIL SERVICE:
Discharge Plans

Looking forward to the day when cessation of war activity will result in the trimming of the federal payroll now including 2,900,912 persons, the civil service commission has established procedure for the discharge of workers.

First to be laid off will be those recalled from retirement and beyond the retirement age, with the second including temporary employees serving under appointments limited to one year or less. In each of these instances, non-veterans will be discharged before veterans, the commission ruled.

Next to be discharged will be so-called transitory employees, embracing those with appointments for the duration and six months afterwards, and finally, "career" employees with unlimited appointments.

Welcome Americans

Entering city of Periers in great drive that carried across Brittany, crew of U. S. reconnaissance car are greeted by two aged French women.

POSTWAR GOODS:
Higher Prices

Because of wage increases, higher material costs and taxes, prices of many postwar civilian goods are expected to rise, with OPA avoiding any undue restriction which might interfere with the reconversion from war industry.

According to estimates, the first new cars, refrigerators and washing machines will cost 20 to 35 per cent more than pre-war models, and there will be increases in the prices of radios, with the trend being toward the production of better quality sets incorporating wartime developments.

Spending Spree

With the nation's pockets well heeled as a result of all-out production for the war effort, U. S. retail spending for the first six months of 1944 reached record proportions, with prospects that the whole year's expenditures would surpass 1943's all-time high.

Chief increase in retail sales for the first half of 1944 was in the so-called non-durable line of goods, including food, clothing, gasoline, drugs, liquor, ice, fuel, cigars, flowers, etc., although business also was up in the so-called durable goods, like jewelry, furniture, building materials, automobiles and auto parts. Only sales of furniture showed a decrease.

Much of the increase in spending, however, was attributed to payment of higher prices for goods, as reflected in the upgrading of inferior meats, greater sales of more expensive clothing in the absence of cheaper apparel, and the soaring costs of used cars.

NAZI ARMS

German weapons are of uniformly high quality in material and workmanship, reports the U. S. army ordnance intelligence unit after examining large numbers of captured arms. There is no evidence of a lack of critical materials, such as tungsten or manganese, it was stated.

Unusual arms that have been taken include a paratrooper's automatic rifle, a 3.4 inch rocket gun with a breech, and a 6.6 inch gun with a mechanical range computer.

Walter Winchell

The following column was written by Walter Winchell in 1943, shortly after the release of the book, "Know Your Hay Fever," by Drs. A. P. Sperling and A. B. Beresford. The material was selected from the book.

HAY fever is now a national problem. It ranks first in prevalence among the non-fatal diseases in the U. S. today. Two hundred million man hours are lost yearly to defense industry through it. There are over 350,000 hay fever cases in N. Y. City, and 5,000,000 throughout the nation, with over 10,000 new cases added yearly. . . The most critical days are still ahead this September for hayfeverites, judging by the way the official pollen counts are running.

The underlying causes of hay fever are unknown other than that certain types of dust—light, windblown pollen (the male fertilizing element for the flowers of trees, weeds and grasses) affect those people who have inherited a tendency to be allergic to them due to something in their blood chemistry which is sensitive to the pollen. This sensitivity manifests itself by inflammation of the membranes of the eyes, nose, mouth, sinuses, intestines and discomfort in many bodily organs.

The sneeze is the badge of the hayfeverite. . . Outstanding pollen pals sneeze fifteen to fifty times nonstop.

It requires a stretch of the imagination to appreciate how a hayfeverite suffers. Only the doctor, your mother, wife or sweetheart thinks you're not an incorrigible crank. Others consider you a hypochondriac, high-strung, nervous, sickly, dynamic, thwarted and generally maladjusted.

It is scientifically established that once a person inherits an allergy to pollen he will be allergic to many other things—foods he eats, things he smells or inhales, house dust, spores, fabrics and other types of pollen grains. Even his wife's (or girl's) face powder.

Decorative, perfumed flowers are little trouble to hayfeveritas because they are insect pollinated.

Research shows that hayfeverites never lose their hay fever. . . Ten per cent of those who take inoculative treatments build up enough tolerance to the pollen to lose their sensitivity to it in three to twenty years, the other ninety per cent who take treatments continue to have it yearly. . . The worst after-effect of hay fever is that thirty per cent of the untreated cases develop asthma.

People travel to high altitudes in the mistaken belief that they can escape pollen, but many hay fever plants grow at high altitudes. . . With the aid of boats and airplanes, pollen clouds have been noted 200 miles out to sea and 9,000 feet in the air.

There is no escape from hay fever at the seashore, winds blowing from inland carry pollen grains. But winds blowing from the ocean will be less troublesome—unless islands are nearby.

All people wearing dark glasses are not celebrities incognito. Hayfeverites find them effective for overcoming photophobia or sensitivity to light that bothers them.

The Household Almanac Page suggests you put fish in the menu and gives recipes and marketing instructions, too; books of interest to Homemakers are reviewed in this issue, and a helpful article on kitchen range care can be found in The American Weekly, the magazine distributed with next week's Sunday Chicago Herald-American.

Silver Wings

By BYRON McCLURE
McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Features.

"CARE in dance?" Captain David Holbrook had been drawn by some irresistible force across the ballroom to the uniformed girl sitting alone at the corner table. Cool gray eyes appraised him and time stood still for a moment as they gazed into each other's eyes; then the girl nodded. Gradually they drifted to the edge of the floor and through a door opening on a small balcony. Neither spoke. Speech was unnecessary. It was enough to be together, complete in each other. Finally David broke the silence. "Just . . . like . . . that!"

She smiled tremulously. "Yes, just . . . like . . . that. I had never believed it could happen so suddenly."

"Neither had I. Gives you a sort of all-gone feeling inside, doesn't it?"

She nodded. "Just like pulling out of a dive."

David grinned. "Exactly! But what do you know about pulling out of dives, young lady?"

She pointed to a pair of shining silver wings pinned to her jacket. "I'm in the Air Corps," she said simply, unable to conceal the pride in her voice. David laughed gaily. "What's so funny about that?" she demanded.

"Funny? Why, I was just laughing happily at finding that we're in the same outfit."

"You know that's not true," she retorted, anger in her voice, "it's just that you men are all alike! You're not willing to admit that women can do things you can . . . just as well and sometimes better! If men aren't the stupidest, the most conceited . . . !" she paused, searching for words. Finding none, she gave him a stinging slap.

Almost roughly he grobbed her arms. "Listen, you little idiot! I get so sick of seeing you women carrying chips on your shoulders, daring anyone to suggest that you aren't really doing men's jobs. Why does a uniform have to go to a woman's head? You could punch that typewriter in some office just as well without it." She started to answer him but, instead, struggled from his grasp and disappeared in the crowded ballroom.

David fell asleep that night dreaming that he was falling through space. But an angel swooped down on silver wings to catch him before he crashed. When he arrived at the airport in the morning the dispatcher approached him. "Your plane has already been warmed up for your ferrying mission, Captain. Lieutenant Winters is ready to take off whenever you say so, Sir."

"Thank you. I'm all set. Let's go." David was anxious to get into the air, where he was at home, where he could think. His mind was still filled with thoughts of that girl.

So preoccupied was he that he run straight into the storm before he realized it. A blinding streak of lightning zigzagged across the sky just in front of the nose of his ship! With senses newly alert, he glanced hurriedly at the instrument panel. The compass indicator was spinning crazily. That bolt had knocked out its delicate mechanism. David knew it was useless to turn back. He would be just as hopelessly lost as he was now. Drat that girl! If he'd had his mind on his business instead of on her, he'd have paid more attention to the weather report.

He pulled back on the stick and pushed the throttle forward, attempting to rise. Almost immediately ice began to form on the wings and propeller; his rate of climb decreased rapidly. He shuddered as he envisaged the jagged peaks below. Then he remembered the other plane. He craned his neck and peered back, not daring to hope. There it was, doggedly following, just a few hundred feet behind! Hastily he flipped the transmitter switch. "Flight leader to flight! Flight leader to flight! Can you hear me? Come in, flight!"

A familiar feminine voice came clearly. "Flight to flight leader! I can hear you. Go ahead, Sir!"

David thought he was dreaming again. "Wh-who are you?"

Again that cool voice. "I'm Lieutenant Winters, Sir. The girl punching a typewriter in some office. Or don't you remember?"

"Why didn't you tell me you were a Ferry Pilot?" he demanded.

"You didn't give me a chance. You probably wouldn't have believed it, anyway. Women aren't supposed to be capable of doing such things, are they?"

After a moment of silence David said meekly, "Will you take command of the flight, Lieutenant? My compass is knocked out. I'm completely lost."

"Yes, Sir." Crisply she ordered, "let me pass." David marveled at the ease with which she outmaneuvered the storm. In a matter of minutes they emerged into the glorious sunshine.

David slowly eased up alongside. As they flew wing tip to wing tip, he could almost reach out and touch her. "Lieutenant Winters?" he asked.

"Yes, Sir?"

"I . . . well, I . . . there's something I'd like to say to you tonight, Lieutenant. Do you think you'd care to listen?"

There was no mistaking the emphasis she placed on her answering. "Yes, Sir!"

Improved Milking Method Saves Labor

Massaging Udder Stimulates Flow

Because of the labor shortage on dairy farms, many dairymen are looking to a new, faster method of milking. An improved system is described by Dr. George E. Taylor, extension dairyman at Rutgers U. The important steps, he says, are these:

1. Start milking at approximately the same time night and morning.

2. Have all equipment in readiness for use before starting to milk.

3. Properly prepare each cow just prior to milking by washing and massaging the udder with chlorinated water heated to 110 to 120 degrees Fahrenheit.

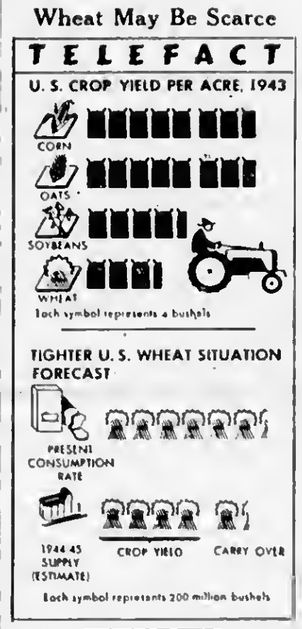
4. Remove a few streams of milk from each quarter into a strip cup just before putting the machine on each cow.

5. Examine and massage each quarter just before milking is completed, pulling downward on the teat cups at the same time.

"Preparing each cow properly for milking makes for cleaner milk and a more pliable udder and stimulates the cow to give down her milk more promptly," Dr. Taylor says. Drawing a few streams of milk into the strip cup is equally stimulating to let down of milk. It discards a little milk that is low in fat and high in bacteria and detects gargety milk at its source. Many dairymen find that hand stripping is no longer necessary.

"Young cows and first calf heifers respond and adjust themselves more readily to the improved milking method than older cows. Even older animals will become accustomed to faster milking, but it may require a little more time and careful handling."

Wheat May Be Scarce



Patch of Culinary Herbs Helps Fill Spice Needs

If you are planting culinary herbs for the first time, start with a few varieties. Select such old-time favorites as dill, sage, parsley, sweet marjoram, chives, and caraway that can pinch-hit for some of the seasoners now cut off because of shipping conditions.

Plant only what you can use to good advantage. Garden space is at a premium this year and seeds—even of herbs—are none too plentiful. Flavors and odors of most culinary herbs are highly concentrated, and only a very small amount is needed to season a quantity of food. Overplanting means a waste of time and energy as well as a waste of soil and seed.

Most herbs will do well on any rich, well-drained garden soil. All annual herbs and most of the biennials and perennials are grown from seed, but the mints, pennyroyal, tarragon and chives are propagated by cuttings or by division.

Homemade Egg Cases

To convert a citrus fruit box to an egg case, nail a ⅛-inch strip of board to the end boards and the divider, to make the box deep enough to hold the standard 30 dozen eggs. A ⅜-inch strip along each side also helps to make the box safe to use. Homemade boxes of half-inch lumber will last for years, if the farmer collects the empty ones each time he delivers eggs locally.

Million Farm Boys in Service

About one million farm workers have been inducted into the armed forces since 1940 when the selective service law became effective, according to War Food administration figures. During the past year approximately 250,000 were inducted from agriculture. In addition to the loss of these men, many others have left farms for various reasons and several million have withdrawn from agriculture without changing their residence.

HOME SAFETY PAYS BIG DIVIDENDS

Safety measures in the home and kitchen pay big dividends to Michigan housewives, says Julia Pond, extension specialist in home management, Michigan State college.

There is not a family in the state which can afford to lose valuable time and energy because of home accidents, so a few minutes spent now and then checking on ways to prevent accidents is time well spent.

Here are suggestions that may help to make the home — especially the kitchen — safer.

Prevent accidents by using safe equipment in the proper manner. Be careful in the use, washing and storage of sharp knives or tools. Do not put them into the dish pan with other dishes. Wash each one separately. Do not store sharp knives in a drawer with other utensils unless you have a separate compartment for them. Better still, if you are going to store sharp knives in a drawer, equip drawer with a knife rack. Another possibility is to hang knives in a rack on wall or inside of cupboard door. By keeping them in racks you will avoid cuts, save time in locating and have to spend less time sharpening knives.

Discard the badly chipped, cracked or broken dishes. And when you do discard them, put them where the children won't be tempted to play with them.

Make it a habit to always use pads or holders when picking up utensils containing hot foods. Hang holders near the stove so you will always have one in the right place at the right time.

Play safe by making certain that the handles of cooking utensils won't turn. If you can't repair a loose handle ,then use that particular utensil for cold foods. When cooking foods, always turn the handles of utensils away from the edge of the stove. One never knows when a child will take hold of the handle and spill the hot food or water causing serious burns. In some instances, adults may accidentally brush by the stove and cause the utensil to overturn because the handle extended beyond the edge of the stove.

Stand on a step ladder not on a box or edge of cupboard drawer when it is necessary to get articles from the shelves beyond your reach.

Keep your kitchen floor clean and also avoid falls by immediately wiping up any spilled grease, food or water. Be certain you rub wax thoroughly after waxing the floor and don't use a scatter rug on the waxed floor.

Information against Rowe was filed under a seldom invoked Federal law. He is accused of zig-zagging dangerously through fishing grounds and swerving within 10 feet of the fishermen's boats, nearly swamping their boats in his wake. He faces a maximum penalty of one year imprisonment or $2,000 fine or both.

A LETTER TO EVERYONE FROM THE CSO

We make this proud report to you Fellow Citizens realizing that whatever Charlevoix accomplishes brings deep pleasure to you. Although some of you are absent for part of the year, we feel that you are with us in every effort, that is for a worthy cause. Your past association with us justifies us feeling that way, and we look for your continued deep interest in Charlevoix and its projects.

You must realize that the outlay of effort in behalf of our boys and girls, which we described above requires a considerable amount of finances. Some contribute to this cause regularly. We would deem it unfair to you, our friend if we were not to give you any opportunity to join us in caring well for our boys and girls. That is the least any of us can do. Our expenses are mounting year by year. We anticipate another successful year, but far more expenses than last year. Checks payable to the Charlevoix Service Organization, Ralph Hamilton, will be judiciously and usefully spent: For God and Country, and for our boys and girls.

The sulphu drugs are used in wholesale amounts, but they get results. In a recent issue of Life it tells about the chain of evacuation hospitals which the casualties go through. It's very interesting and just the way we do it.

I was very happy to see that they gave the boys fresh eggs and oranges the first morning and sometimes after that. It was timed just right and you can imagine how good it tasted to them. They all have ravenous appetites after going for weeks on K rations. The hospital believes in feeding them too. They get the best of everything and all they want.

This hospital wasn't built with any conveniences and it's hard to take care of many sick patients but we are doing it. Each ward is made up of six buildings which aren't connected by ramps, corridors or covering of any kind. There is no running water in the buildings where the patients are running to do while carrying medicines and food trays. The floors are crude cement and hard on your feet after many hours. I don't mind this kind of tiredness though, when I am doing something for the comfort and relief of the boys. Whether or not we will go to France hasn't been decided yet. I'd like to go but I don't mind too much as long as I keep busy doing something worthwhile."

Stage Set for SPEBSQSA Jamboree

Every effort has been expended by the local chapter of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America, Inc., for a successful song-fest and parade of quartets for their Saturday night jamboree at the Charlevoix High School gymnasium.

The stage will have special lighting, flooded on a new shell where microphones will pick up the faintest whisper and transport them through the public address system to every corner of the auditorium. Seating arrangements have been made to accommodate 1300 listeners.

Bob Hazenberg, Ed Gaikema, Ray Hall and Gordon Hall comprise the Harmony Halls, of Grand Rapids, whose recordings are broadcast every afternoon over WJR. After winning the state contest in Muskegon in Febraary, they eliminated nearly 100 of the nations best at Detroit in June to become International Champions.

The Charlevoices Trio, Esther Hawley, Mildred Webster and Alice Bellinger and the Ballad Benders, Doug Nettleton, Charles Hamlin, Gib Saltonstall and Don Evans, two groups which have given much of their time and talent in appearing at various benefits both in Charlevoix and neighboring towns, also a girls trio and a male quartet from Boyne City, will have four of the twelve places on the program.

The intermission number will be a male chorus featuring all of the SPEBSQSA members present.

Sow Wheat After September 3 to Avoid Hessian Fly

Charlevoix county farmers planning to sow wheat this year are advised by County Agricultural Agent, B. C. Mellencamp to sow after September 3rd to avoid damage from Hessian flies.

This date, which varies throughout the state, is based on the observations of entomologists that in each locality after a certain date each year, there is still time before winter to establish a stand of wheat but not time for the adult Hessian flies to lay eggs between the leaves of wheat plants. These dates are based on latitude, altitude, and nearness to the Great Lakes.

The Hessian fly does its damage to young wheat stands while in the larvae or maggot stage. The larvae obtain food by scraping the plant tissue, thus weakening the stem and interfering with the supply of nutrients to the head of the plant. Injured plants lodge and show withered heads. In severe infestations, complete loss of the crop may result either from the fall or from the spring attack.

Owing to the necessity of getting wheat established before cold weather,—Mr. Mellencamp urges that Charlevoix County farmers plant as soon after the fly-free date as possible.

The Farmer and War Bond Purchases

by Charles W. Holman, Secretary
The National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation

AMERICAN farmers have a great deal more at stake in purchasing War Bonds than simply a patriotic urge to assist in financing the war so that it may be prosecuted to an early and victorious conclusion. Modern war demands vast capital expenditures far in excess of 1944 income which may be met by current income receipts. The United States Government borrowing, it is true, part of this borrowing is through commercial banks additional to ordinary purchases were created through the expansion of credit. On the other hand, if the borrowing is largely from individuals much of their excess funds are drained off. Hence, the pressure on prices resulting from unusually large funds bidding for limited amounts of goods and services is relieved, and thus inflation retarded.

A tremendously increased agricultural production and some increase in average prices received above those paid by farmers have raised the net income of all United States farmers from the 1935-39 average of $1.7 billion to $6.3 billion in 1941, $9.4 billion in 1942, and an estimated $12.5 billion in 1943. With available supplies of farm machinery replacements and building materials limited, Agriculture has a fund available for either debt retirement, savings readily liquidated for future purchases of machinery, buildings, etc., or for present investment in land.

A marked decrease in farm mortgages in recent years indicates that much of this fund has been properly applied to debt retirement. However, activity in land sales and a very marked increase in land values demonstrate that farmers are probably diverting a large part of this fund into land purchases. From March 1, 1943, to March 1, 1944, average land values per acre rose 15 per cent, with the larger part of the rise taking place in the last four months of the period. The increase during this four-month period was the highest on record, being 20 per cent greater than the average monthly rate of increase for the 1919-20 boom year. Average values per acre have increased more than one-third in the past 3 years. In the 1916-19 period the rise was about the same.

It appears that an overcapitalization of probably temporarily high farm commodity prices is in process just as in World War I. Large mortgage debts incurred now, at high levels of income, will prove disastrous when both total agricultural production and prices fall. Land values are based on the net return to land. With the end of the war in sight and with the prospect that farm labor and other costs will require a relatively larger return leaving the return to land less, the logical course for land values at present would appear to be downward rather than upward.

Therefore, it appears that farmers would do well to invest every available dollar, beyond that needed for debt retirement, in Government Bonds. These can be held against the day when necessary farm replacements will be available and when farm land values will have become more stable. In this way the individual farmer may assist in hastening the day of return of his son, and also have capital available to help finance him in ventures of his own choice. U. S. Treasury Department

Playground News of Field and Stream

A female bear and three good-sized cubs were seen recently in northwest Oscoda county by Verne Dockham, local conservation officer, who reports that more bears have been seen and more bear "sign" has been noted in the vicinity this summer than in several years.

It is unusual when a bear gives birth to triplets.

A heavy acorn crop in many localities in northern counties of Michigan may help to hold down crop damage by deer this fall.

Acorns are a favorite food of deer and may keep the animals from farmers' fields if continued dry weather or heavy early frosts reduce usual food supplies.

There have been few reports of crop damage by deer this summer although some fields were heavily grazed last spring.

While conservation department game men say it is still too early to discuss fall hunting prospects, they report many deer are seen and that the deer herd below the Straits—little harmed by the mild winter of 1943-44 — should have increased in size.

Most popular "foreigners" among Michigan's exotic bird species are the Chinese ring-necked pheasants which roam the farmland of southern Michigan and furnish the only bird hunting for the majority of small game hunters.

Approximately one-half of the lakes in Michigan are less than 10 acres in surface area, and only 19 lakes have more than 5,000 acres, while the average size of all lakes is about 66 acres.

About 80 per cent of the material used for construction in the United States is lumber.

Deer at the conservation department's Swan Creek wildlife experimeat station near Allegan have been helping weed a potato patch, according to biologists at the station. While the deer browsed weeds in the patch to a considerable extent, they have not touched the potato plants.

Increasing fire hazard over the entire state — southern farm lands and northern forest lands alike — is reported by the conservation department.

Fires fought by the department in both peninsulas more than trebled in number during the week 86 fires causing a loss of 776 acres. The previous week's fires burned 195 acres.

Tractor exhausts are starting fires in farmers' fields and in northern lumbering regions. Turf and muck fires have been started that may burn for months.

The department emphasizes that grass fires are difficult to control under present conditions and that they may destroy soil fertility permanently.

A total of 13,585 acres has been burned in 1,024 fires reported in 1944. Last year's fire loss was 18,563 acres in 723 fires.

Oil and gas leases to be offered at public auctions here September 7 and 8 by the conservation department cover 60,696 acres of state-owned lands in 15 central Michigan counties. Lands for which lease rights are located in Antrim, Arenac, Crawford, Gladwin, Iosco, Isabella, Kalkaska, Mason, Midland, Missaukee, Newaygo, Oceana, Osceola, Otsego and Roscommon counties.

Latest purchases of land for recreational development in southeastern Michigan bring a total of 1,586 acres acquired for the purpose into state ownership. The conservation department's lands division will purchase 100,000 acres within 24 projected units in a belt 50 to 60 miles from downtown Detroit. A three-million dollar appropriation for the purpose was voted by the legislature last spring.

FAIR NOW ON AT TRAVERSE CITY

Everything is in readiness for what association officials state will be the best Northwestern Michigan Fair in several years which opened Tuesday, August 29 for a four-day event.

Officials base their statement on the fact that entries to date, particularly in the cattle classes, are far greater than for several years past and accommodations on the fair grounds are going to be crowded with exhibits already entered.

Getting away from the exhibits, a better entertainment program has been secured this year than at any previous time since the war broke out.

Again this year the Midway will be supplied by the Happyland Shows which will furnish the concessions and rides. New rides and several new shows will be included along the concession streets.

Voorhees, nationally known booking firm, is again furnishing the evening revue in front of the grandstand, supplying a dozen acts which have never before been seen in Northern Michigan.

For the afternoon grandstand crowds, three horsepulling contests will be presented ,the light teams pulling on Wednesday, the heavies on Thursday and a free-for-all on Friday.

A program of running races, farmer's novelty races, bicycle races for boys and girls and Shetland pony races are scheduled for the track each afternoon. In addition, Dakota Slim and his horse Jim, well known rodeo figures, will appear on each afternoon program.

Monday, August 28 was entry day and the fair opened Tuesday morning and continues until Friday evening.

Natives Flee Jap Brutality

People of Netherlands Isles Driven to Jungles to Escape Butchers.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.—Wanton brutality by the Japanese, terror and hunger, have driven whole populations of some of the Netherlands Indies islands into the jungle, it was disclosed in the first complete report on conditions in the archipelago after two years of Japanese occupation.

The report was issued by the Netherlands government information service in Australia on the second anniversary of the fall of Java. Some of the highlights of the report are:

The Japanese customarily bayonet, shoot or beat Indonesians to death for the slightest resistance to their attempts to force the men into labor camps or semi-military organizations, and villages throughout the islands are empty of able-bodied men who have been taken off by the Japanese.

Black markets exist in everything except cotton, which is almost non-existent, and the island people and even the Japanese soldiers have little to wear.

Allied Prisoners Suffer.

Allied war prisoners on the islands are robbed of all personal possessions by Japanese soldiers and their treatment violates all international rules, with the Japanese reserving their most brutal treatment for Netherlands soldiers, whom they particularly hate because the Netherlands declared war on Japan, without being attacked, when Pearl Harbor and Singapore were attacked. Civilian internees are said to be equally badly treated.

Japanese losses on the islands were and are greater than have generally been reported.

Forced labor has been instituted for the whole of the area. Especially in the outlying districts the men capable of work are driven off like slaves to work in forests and swamps. The whip and the cane are used freely to convince the people they had better obey. In case of refusal, bayoneting and shooting supplement these arguments.

The instructions given by a Japanese commander to village chiefs to send immediately a certain group of schooled villagers, close with these words:

"Those who do not come immediately will be fetched by the Japanese soldiers and will be punished. This punishment will consist of (1) light punishment, viz., to be beaten half to death, (2) heavy punishment, viz., to be beheaded."

Even in Java there is a shortage of rice as the result of Japanese rapacity. Before the war, this island had a yearly surplus of 150,000 to 240,000 tons.

The small ration of eight ounces a day is made up of one-third rice, one-third soya beans and one-third washed and dried cassava root, a food with little protein or vitamins.

These rations are sold at a price five times what the Japanese pay for them. Moreover, most other commodities are rationed with similar margins for the Japanese.

Word has been received from some islands that even the Japanese garrison is short of food because no further supplies are being received, while the areas themselves have already been entirely looted. The shipping position appears to be very bad.

The Japanese have tried also to win over the Mohammedan population by giving them preference at the expense of the Christians. In some areas, where the Mohammedans are in a minority and education was almost entirely in the hands of missions subsidized by the government, they appear to have had, at first, some measure of success. However, brutality, rapacity and failure to master the economic situation have estranged the Mohammedans no less than the Christians.

British Blast Axis Ships After Foe Wastes Shots

LONDON.—A British submarine recently surprised an enemy convoy and sank one freighter and severely damaged a second, while the enemy escort vessels fired widely in such panic they failed to score a single hit, the admiralty announced.

The submarine intercepted the convoy, consisting of two ammunition freighters and two escort vessels, and blew up one freighter with its first torpedo. The panic-stricken escort vessels fired all their guns, even their anti-aircraft batteries, exhausting all their ammunition in vain attempts to drive off the Allied attacker.

After the escort vessels ceased firing for lack of ammunition, the submarine returned and torpedoed the second freighter, leaving it badly damaged.

Declares Japs Trying To Divert Yellow River

KUNMING, CHINA.—The Japanese in north China are commandeering workmen to start digging a new course for the Yellow river, the local army newspaper Sao Tang Pau has reported. The paper said the move was part of Japanese preparations for a last ditch fight in north China. The Japanese were said to be planning to cut a channel, making the Yellow flow into the Wei, and thence to the sea.

Civilian Goods Needs Stressed

Truman Committee Reports Its Observations on Production Crisis.

WASHINGTON — Unless government obstacles to civilian production are removed the threat of an unemployment crisis in the not too far distant future is envisaged by members of the Truman committee.

"One of our most important jobs is to keep to close to [illegible] war contract cancellations and orders to see that factories [illegible] can turn to civilian production [illegible] items are not left [illegible] Senator Truman (Mo.), committee chairman. Agreeing, Senator Ferguson (Rep., Mich.) declared that government agencies must adopt a technique for the quick removal of machinery from plants no longer needed for war work to enable them to resume peacetime manufacture."

In its third annual report released over the week-end, the committee declared that the nation "must not prevent the use of surplus commodities and thereby create unemployment."

"Any attempt at close control over the production of hundreds or even thousands of items which might be made from surplus materials would do much more harm than good," the report said. "It must be remembered that only surplus raw materials will be made available for civilian production and those only to manufacturers who have not been offered contracts for war items."

Little Hope for Autos.

The committee held out little hope for an early resumption of automobile manufacture, since such construction would conflict with needs for more heavier and longer range bombers, ships and other war needs. "Decisions by government," it also added, "may have to be made with respect to a few score [illegible] items such as washing machines and other household appliances," since they would require scarce materials such as ball bearings and electric motors.

A War Production Board official predicted that the report would stimulate its "test tube" plan for permitting small plants to reenter civilian production, a program which has encountered military opposition on the grounds that even small pools of manpower should not be devoted to new civilian goods if they could be channeled into war activity elsewhere.

While this plan is temporarily snagged, WPB has gone ahead on other fronts. Scheduled for issuance this week is a series of slight revisions of 50 or 60 restrictive orders, which for the most part will permit the reuse of original materials for substitute materials in consumer items. This is in recognition that the three big scarcity metals—steel, aluminum and copper — now are more plentiful than some of the substitutes of two years ago, especially wood.

On another major front, construction, WPB is charting a more liberal policy, despite some military and other opposition. Reliable sources state that WPB henceforth will interpret its stern rules on construction more leniently, without altering the rules themselves. A community's request for a new firehouse, for instance, which probably would have been turned down a year ago, might now be found essential to the public safety—if there were available materials close at hand to build it.

"In general, our trend has been down the line of the Truman recommendations, provided that the civilian wants can be met without using labor, plants or materials needed for war production," a WPB official said.

History Is Made at War Front by Stevedores, Too

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS, NAPLES.—Port battalions unloading supplies fed into the Anzio beachhead and Cassino front simultaneously during recent weeks were especially lauded by Gen. Sir Harold R. L. G. Alexander.

On February 13, during the critical period, the battalions unloaded 1,770 long tons of cargo from one ship, peninsular base section officials explained.

The battalions, composed of former office workers as well as former stevedores and dock workers, are veterans of more than one beachhead operation, having unloaded ships at Fedala near Algiers, Casablanca in Morocco, Bizerte, Zela, Salerno and Anzio.

Officials said the record was accomplished in "one of the most completely destroyed harbors of this war," and climaxed an unloading record since the battalions moved into the choked Naples harbor.

Troop Plane Output Is Soaring, Maker Reports

BUFFALO, N. Y.—A 250 per cent boost in production of the C-46 commando, cargo and troop transport plane in 1944 has been announced by Burdette S Wright, vice president of the Curtiss-Wright corporation airplane division. Wright also reported production of an improved version of the P-40 Warhawk, to be known as the P-40N, and a 50 per cent decrease in absenteeism in the last year.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"The more I read about it, Judge, the more I realize the tactics and requirements of this war are as different from the one I fought in 25 years ago as night is from day."

"Yes, and I can give you an example of how true that is, Fred. In World War I the chief uses of alcohol produced for war purposes were found in smokeless powder, medical supplies and chemical warfare materials. In this war the need for this product is far more vital because it is also used as a fuel to propel torpedoes, to make shatterproof glass for airplane windshields and instrument covers, to make lacquers used in camouflaging equipment and as a base for synthetic rubber needed for tires, gas masks, paratroop equipment and dozens of other things.

"Every time I think of it, Fred, I realize how fortunate we were in having a beverage distilling industry in existence when war broke out . . . ready and eager to convert 100% to the production of this critically needed war product. I'm mighty sure bootleggers wouldn't have been of much help."

A LESSON FOR DICTATORS

As the great dictatorships of Germany, Japan and Italy crumble on their rotten foundations, it is with a feeling of pride that we in the United States point to the production records of free enterprise, compared with the much boasted efficiency of the totalitarian governments. The output of American industry has even surpassed our most cherished hopes.

Take oil, for example. In no place on earth except in America where the system of freedom of enterprise has been recognized, could such a record have been made.

After Pearl Harbor, American refiners were informed by our government that the then 40,000 barrels daily production of 100-octane gasoline would have to be increased to about 200,000 barrels daily by the end of 1942 to supply military operations.

The oil industry went to work on a construction program which involved 450 domestic oil refineries and 189 separate projects of various types of installations necessary to the manufacture of special ingredients essential in making the finished product.

Today the Allied flying forces, less than three years after Pear Harbor, can tap wellsprings of high octane aviation gasoline for 500,000 barrels daily.

WASTE PAPER RECEIPTS DECLINE

Renewed appeals for increased effort in salvage of waste paper have been issued by the State Salvage Committee of the Michigan Office of Civilian Defense, following a decline in waste paper receipts at Michigan mills of 25 per cent under receipts a month ago.

With Michigan paperboard mills providing nearly one-third of all paperboard manufactured in the United States, production is being seriously affected by the slowdown in collections. While attributed largely to hot weather and the fact that school children are not currently active in collections, the State Salvage Committee nevertheless asserted that unless more paper is salvaged the war effort may be seriously affected.

H. J. HEINZ, II TO WELCOME SERVICEMEN

When they return from military service, former Pittsburgh employees of H. J. Heinz company will be personally welcomed by the president of the organization, H. J. Heinz, II.

"I'm going to meet every returning serviceman and woman and personally welcome them upon their return to their former jobs.

"I want them to know we are sincerely glad to have them back and deeply grateful for the sacrifices they have made for all of us."

"Planning for the re-employment of servicemen and women isn't a distant post-war job. They are returning to civilian life at the rate of 70,000 a month, and they need jobs right now. We are ready to place them the very day they come back to work."

In a letter addressed to managers of the company's sales and factory branches, Mr. Heinz wrote, "Our returning veterans should be welcomed with a spirit of friendliness and genuine concern for their welfare.

"All of us on the home front feel properly humble about our part in the war compared to that of those who have been in service, many of whom have risked everything, and all of whom have sacrificed home and jobs. Let them know we appreciate it. For many, it will take time to erase from their minds the hardships they have endured. We must help them forget those experiences and find their right civilian place in the land they fought for.

"After placing the Heinz ex-servicemen and women, we're going to continue to give other servicemen the preference.

"We have planned for extensive sales activities, new products and a plant expansion program that we hope will enable us to employ more people than ever before.

There are 25 Heinz factories in the United States, England, Canada and Australia, and 120 sales branches in the United States and foreign countries. In Northern Michigan, six salting and eight receiving stations are operated. Cucumbers and cauliflower are grown for food products and given the first manufacturing process at the Charlevoix salting house.

Recipe for a Perfect Marriage

Dee and Jane Cuppers celebrated their Golden Wedding Anniversary last Saturday. Having so many friends, it seemed like half the town stopped in that evening to pay their respects.

Little Ida Moffat brought a home-made poem to read, called Love Enduring. Bert Childers fiddled "Silver Threads Among the Gold." Will Dudley made a speech and proposed a toast.

And as I watched that toast—Dee with his glass of beer, Jane with her buttermilk—I thought to myself: There's a recipe for happy marriage. Two folks with different tastes—no doubt an honest fault or two—who through the years have learned to live in tolerance and understanding.

From where I sit, Dee and Jane are a mighty good example to young married people of today—an example of how moderation, tolerance and understanding can build lasting happiness and solid homes.

Soil Conservation Steps Up Yield 21%

Big Advance Was Made in Last Decade

Looming large among factors contributing to the American farmers' record production job on food and fiber for war is the notable increase shown in acre yields of vital crops.

Per acre yields of major crops during the years 1934-43 were 11.8 per cent greater than yields in the pre-conservation practices decade of 1923-32, according to government figures. In the period 1937-43, the seven years during which conservation practices have been carried out as a part of the Agricultural Adjustment agency's program, crop yields per acre averaged 21.2 per cent above the 1923-32 figure. Yields in 1943 were higher than in any year since 1923, except for the phenomenal 1942 acre yield which was 36 per cent above the average for the earlier decade.

Comparison of acreage and total production figures shows that while total acreage in 1937-43 was about 8 per cent smaller than the 1923-32 average, total agricultural output increased 14.5 per cent. The increased yields since 1937, due primarily to the employment of conservation practices, have been responsible for this high output figure from a smaller acreage.

The 1944 AAA conservation program, emphasizing practices that will immediately increase yields, seeks expansion of the use of lime, phosphate and other fertilizers, promotion of legume, hay and grass seed harvest, continuance of erosion control and water conservation measures and expansion of range and pasture practices.

With increased needs for food and fiber expected in 1945, when most of this year's crop will be consumed, U. S. farmers are looking to the Agricultural Conservation program to maintain the land's productivity for the current crop while protecting its fertility for future plantings.

"It also keeps reminding me to meet my production goals."

LOCAL MERCHANT PASSES AWAY AUGUST 28

Andrew Christian Hansen was born in Jyspring, near Copenhagen Denmark, September 28, 1860.

In 1865, the family came to America by sailing vessel and settled near Greenville, Michigan, where they lived for some time.

In this neighborhood he attended the public school and was confirmed in the Lutheran church; the church of his much beloved mother, Mattie Hansen.

As a young man, Andrew Hansen lived in Charlevoix with his parents, at which time foundations were laid for many lifelong friendships. In his early youth, he worked in lumber mills and later owned and operated several of his own, the last one being at Rexton, west of Sault Ste. Marie, where he made a home for his aged mother for many years.

It was at Rexton that he met Louisa Graunstadt and they were married January 7th, 1915 at Onaway. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Frank Leonard, brother-in-law, pastor of the Methodist church in Onaway at that time.

To this union were born six children, five now living. Lt. Andrew Christian, Jr., somewhere in England; Lt. William L. Hansen, Greenville, Texas; AC. Edward P. Hansen, Santa Ana, California; Marie Hansen and Esther Hansen both of Charlevoix.

Mr. Hansen passed away August 28th, 1944 at the age of 83 years. He was a kind and devoted husband and father and died as he lived "with malice toward none" and by the golden rule," Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you."

These words from Henry W. Longfellow seem very fitting:

"There is an honor in business that is the fine gold of it that reckons with every man justly; that loves light; that regards kindness and fairness more highly than goods or price or profit. It speaks for him in the heart of everyone. His friendships are serene and true."

KIWANIS CLUB MET TUESDAY, AUGUST 29th

Members of the Charlevoix Kiwanis club had their regular dinner meeting at the city park on Lake Charlevoix. A delicious box lunch prepared by President Bill Meyer's family proved to be the main course.

Moving pictures of St. Petersburg were shown later.

High spot of the evening's program was the presentation of a gift to Oscar P. North, first club president and a former Lieutenant-Governor of this district. Oscar will be leaving shortly to take up his new duties as Superintendent of the Newago Public schools.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Allies Forming Huge Pincer to Squeeze Nazi Armies in France; Permit Essential Goods Output

Released by Western Newspaper Union

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

France—U. S. infantrymen draw beads on Nazi snipers during street fighting for Brittany port of St. Malo.

EUROPE:
New Front

With U. S. and French troops storming inland in southern France, the Allies were developing a huge pincer in that embattled country to squeeze in the Germans.

Even as the new Allied invasion armada swept ashore between Toulon and Nice, U. S. and British troops cleared the Germans from the northeast corner of France, with doughboys advancing within 40 miles of Paris.

Although not conducted on the scale of D-day operations, the invasion of southern France was a gigantic undertaking, with no less than 800 warships from the U. S., British and Canadian navies supporting the landings. As U. S. doughboys and French poilus spilled onto the beaches, paratroopers and glider - borne troops were dropped far inland to paralyze enemy defenses and communications in the rear.

First sporadic, enemy resistance gradually stiffened as the Nazis overcame the shock of the attack and shifted troops and artillery into the endangered zones. Because the terrain in this sector is rugged and mountainous, the enemy was expected to base his defense on natural obstacles.

Although suffering a major defeat in northeastern France, Nazi General von Kluge succeeded in pulling the biggest bulk of his forces out of the huge trap the Allies had formed, with the British and Canadians bearing southward from below Caen and the Americans pressing eastward from Mortain and northward from Le Mans.

Even though von Kluge did extricate the bulk of his forces, Allied armor took a big toll of his desperate rearguard units, while U. S. and British airmen whose roaring aircraft dominated the skies, shot up the long columns in retreat.

Russ Slowed

As the Russian advance rolled into East Prussia and pointed closer to central Germany itself, Nazi resistance stiffened, with the Reds punching hard for shorter gains.

To the north, 200,000 German troops in Estonia and Latvia cut off from Nazi forces in East Prussia, fought bitterly to ward off Russian attempts to outflank them and compel their surrender or push them into the Baltic sea.

In the hard fighting around East Prussia, the Russ were pressing on the province frontally from the east, and on the flank from the southeast. With the Russians 75 miles away from central Germany to the south, the Nazis threw in strong tank and infantry counter-attacks in an attempt to stop the Red steam-roller.

GERMANY:
Drain Manpower

With German propagandists crying for three more months time to build up their sagging armies, Reichs-Mobilizer Paul Goebbels proceeded to drain the last drop of available manpower and bolster civilian economy by extensive use of women in industry.

According to reliable Swiss reports, about 80 Nazi divisions, or roughly 1,200,000 men, will complete training and be ready for action by the end of October, while another 30 divisions, or 450,000 men from this year's draft, will not be available before 1945.

In mobilizing every available man, technical workers, railway and postal employees, movie picture people were among those called.

CIVILIAN GOODS:
Permit Production

With objections of the military chieftains overcome, the War Production board permitted the output of hundreds of items of civilian goods by manufacturers with surplus facilities and labor as the fourth step in its program of gradual reconversion. Previous steps included use of such former critical material as magnesium; construction of postwar working models, and permission to order machine tools.

Under the latest step, manufacturers in position to resume civilian production will obtain priority ratings for materials they earn out such essential goods as vacuum cleaners, electric ranges, heating stoves, pails and buckets, insecticide spray guns, electric flat irons, storage batteries, farm machinery except tractors, tire jacks, gauges and pumps, alarm clocks, copper animal traps and cages, and water storage tanks for agricultural uses.

Despite the WPB order, however, Production Czar Donald Nelson warned: "For the time being, it is not anticipated that any large increases in production . . . will be possible."

DROUTH:
Heavy Rains Needed

With the prolongation of the drouth and hot, burning weather, heavy rainfall was needed throughout wide areas east of the Mississippi stretching clear to the Atlantic ocean, to save corn, soybean and garden acreage and nourish seared pasturage.

While areas west of the Mississippi river and in the south benefited from adequate rainfall, drouth-stricken Illinois, Indiana and Ohio reportedly suffered a loss of 83,000,000 bushels of corn, with Ohio one of the hardest hit states, with yields of the grain supposedly off 50 per cent and the potato crop almost a total loss. Because of wilting pasturage, farmers were compelled to dip into their dwindling feed reserves to supply livestock.

In New York, only a half an inch of rainfall in July retarded growth and razed pasturage, and in Massachusetts, the agricultural commissioner declared that an inch of rain would be worth $1,000,000 to the state's farmers.

PACIFIC:
Good News

With U. S. air, naval and ground forces beating down Japan's strategic outer defense system, Adm. Chester W. Nimitz had a good word for those wondering about the formidability of the enemy in the Pacific.

Adm. Nimitz

Said Admiral Nimitz: "I am not sure or convinced that invasion (of the Japanese homeland) will be necessary to insure a winning peace."

To the question of whether air bombardment alone might bring Japan to her knees, Admiral Nimitz replied: "It hardly seems possible, because of the great distances involved, to deliver the same bomb tonnage on Japan as has been delivered on Germany and German positions in occupied Europe.

"I do not believe any single form of attack will defeat Japan. It will have to be a combination of every weapon—sea blockade, air bombardment, possible surface ship bombardment. . .

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

FEWER FEEDERS: The number of cattle on feed in 11 midwestern states as of August 1 declined 41 per cent from the same date of 1943. There were 700,000 fewer feeders, one of the sharpest reductions in the history of the corn belt. The bureau of agricultural economics, which released the report, added that the number of feeder cattle is the smallest since August, 1937.

PRINTERS REJOIN AFL: The International Typographical union has completed the process of reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor, after four years of separation. The printers' union paid a per capita tax on 64,000 members for August. In 1939, when the split took place, the union was paying on an average of 79,200 members.

GAS:
Consider Boosts

Because of the "winning battle against the black market," OPA officials reportedly considered a boost in "B" card gasoline rations to 825 miles monthly from the 470 now prevailing in the Middle West and the 325 and 400 allowed on the Atlantic and Pacific coast areas.

In considering the boost, OPA officials recognized that many "B" card holders were salesmen or other people who depended upon the automobile for their livelihood, and present rations were insufficient to allow them an adequate range of coverage. Because a large part of black market withdrawals have come from "B" card-holders, OPA said, an increase in their allotment would further decrease the illegal sales.

Because cuts in pleasure driving are not considered hardships, and rations for war workers and others are sufficient, there would be no increase in "A" or "C" rations, OPA officials said.

WAR COSTS:
277 Million Daily

Uncle Sam is spending $277,000,000 daily in the prosecution of the war, or 8 per cent more than a year ago, when expenditures totaled $257,000,000.

During the first 36 days of the fiscal year 1945, which got underway in July, war spending approximated $10,000,000,000, roughly $1,000,000,000 more than at the same time last year.

On August 11, the public debt stood at $210,640,000,000, an increase of $63,558,000,000 since the same date last year.

Coaxed Out

After thinking it over, this Japanese soldier emerged from hiding in dugout on Tinian island in Pacific without offering suicidal resistance, still holding cigarette which U. S. marines used in coaxing him out.

WHEAT:
1945 Acreage

To provide fully for estimated needs at normal yields, the War Food administration established a goal of 68,500,000 acres in wheat for 1945, 1,900,000 more than was planted this year and 13,500,000 more than in 1943.

Because of the improved wheat supply situation this year and an estimated record crop of 1,132,000,000 bushels out of 1944 harvests, WFA advised farmers that any planting over the established goals would be undesirable.

Even if yields were below normal, WFA said, the goal acreage should provide for safe supplies in view of the adequate reserves.

CANADA:
Help Trade

Under an act of parliament, the Canadian government will get directly in back of its exporters in the postwar world to assure part of the rich 3 billion dollar foreign wartime trade that the dominion now enjoys.

Terms of the act call for the government establishment of a corporation that would be empowered to issue insurance contracts to exporters up to 100 million dollars.

In addition, the government is authorized to guarantee obligations of those countries to which shipments may be made; to make loans to such countries to assure payments to exporters, and to purchase or guarantee the securities of such countries in order to provide them with the currency with which to buy from Canada.

Grain Carryover

As the result of a 40 per cent reduction from the previous year, Canada's wheat carryover approximated 355,000,000 bushels on July 31, lowest level since 1940.

Sharp reductions also occurred in stocks of oats, which stood at 108,000,000 bushels; barley, 45,000,000 bushels, and rye, 5,500,000 bushels.

PAWNSHOPS

High wages and plenty of work has brought hard, dull times to the nation's pawnbrokers. Few people want to borrow money now, and those who do pay off their loans quickly. That means little interest income.

The other side of the game—the sale of unredeemed pledges—is also at low ebb. Most shops sold out their stock of miscellaneous merchandise in the early days of the war. Now, with plenty of cash customers, the broker has little to sell.

Nazi Tunic Taken

Capt. Tom Carothers and Lieut. Roy Green, both of Tuscaloosa, Ala., try on the tunic of a German general, just one of the souvenirs that fell into American hands during the great offensive. Note the iron Cross still on the coat.

Omar and Winnie

Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain pays an unexpected visit to Lieut. Gen. Omar Bradley at his headquarters somewhere in France. Winnie waits as General Bradley gives phone instructions.

GOOD NEWS FOR ICE CREAM EATERS

Recent modification of War Food Order No. 8 is making it possible for ice cream manufacturers to use more non-fat milk solids in ice cream. Previously the manufacturer could only use 80% as much non-fat solids as he used of butterfat.

In other words, for each 10 lbs. of butterfat he could use only 8 pounds of non-fat milk solids. Now he can use as much as 22% of milk solids in his ice cream, which means that if he makes ice cream containing 10% of fat he may use 12% of non-fat solids instead of 8 percent as formerly. This modification is possible because the shortage of non-fat milk solids is being relieved.

Efficient Feeding Gets Better Results

Careful Management Needed to Meet Goals

Increased efficiency can solve part of the 1944 livestock and poultry feeding problem, according to War Food administration officials.

During 1942-43, about 28 per cent more feed concentrates was employed than during 1941-42, but output of livestock products increased by only 13 per cent.

Officials point out that if the rate of feeding can be held midway between the two-thirds of a ton of concentrates per livestock unit fed during 1941-42 and the three-fourths of a ton fed during 1942-43, production goals of 1944 should be achieved with use of only 140 7 million tons of feed concentrates. This would be about 7 million tons less than last year's feeding.

Suggestions made by department of agriculture officials with regard to feeding efficiency include: Light hogs can be produced with less feed per pound than heavy hogs; more eggs can be produced with less feed by culling out more of the non-layers and keeping a larger percentage of pullets; beef cattle should be fed shorter and lighter; and more dependence should be placed on roughage for cattle and sheep.

Experts urge elimination of crowded farm conditions whereever possible. With many farmers raising more corn and soybeans, for example, less pasture is available and resulting crowded conditions contribute to disease and to death loss among animals and poultry.

Farmers in feed surplus areas have been urged to produce the commodities they can produce best and to adjust their livestock operations to a level that will enable the shipment of some surplus feed to the farmers in deficit-feed areas.

"Have you noticed a difference in this clover since the boss started using phosphates and lime?"

Yearling Heifers Thrive On Plenty of Roughage

Heifers, like older cows, are capable of utilizing large amounts of roughage. Dr. George E. Taylor, extension dairyman at Rutgers U., says that feeding heifers all the roughage they will eat is a grain-saving practice worth considering.

"Yearling heifers can be successfully raised on roughage alone from one year of age to two months prior to freshening," Dr. Taylor reports. "During summer, heifers must be provided abundant pasture in order to make good gains on pasture alone. This can best be done by a system of rotation grazing. A large group of Holstein and Guernsey heifers at the New Jersey Dairy Research farm, Sussex county, averaged a gain of one and a fifth pounds per day on pasture alone. Holsteins gained an average of one and a half pounds and Guernseys one pound.

"In winter, the same group of heifers on hay and silage alone gained from a fifth of a pound to one pound a day. During the entire period, the heifers were normal and carried plenty of flesh."

Heifers under one year of age must be fed some grain to grow normally. The required amount depends upon the quality of roughage fed. However, baby calves can be raised on a minimum amount of milk and changed to dry feed at 9ve to six weeks of age, resulting in a saving of both milk and grain.

"Some dairymen may be tempted to discontinue raising heifers in order to conserve grain," Dr. Taylor says, "but this would be a short-sighted program from the standpoint of the future dairy industry. However, do not waste feed by raising poor heifers. Select only the best heifers for replacements."

Farm Notes

The best way of turning a cow dry is to reduce the amount of feed and, when necessary, limit the amount of water and simply stop milking.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

"Of surpassing interest, scarcely second to that of Mackinac itself."

As voiced by Harry H. Whiteley, chairman of the Michigan state conservation commission and publisher of the Dowagiac Daily News at Dowagiac, such is the historical significance of old Fort Drummond on Drummond island, the topic of last week's Michigan Mirror in this newspaper.

The British fort, which was manned by 350 to 400 red-coated soldiers for 13 years after the War of 1812, has been shamefully neglected for 116 years by both federal and state governments. Its location is unmarked today by even a simple historical tablet, in sharp contrast to the care given by the Dominion of Canada to old Fort St. Joseph on St. Joseph Island nearby. A summer resorter had nailed a board to a tree to indicate the British military cemetery at Fort Drummond!

These facts, recorded bluntly here last week, were the result of an incidental visit to Drummond island by the president and manager of the Michigan Press association.

They brought an instant response from Mr. Whiteley of the state conservation commission who wrote:

"I am glad the Michigan Press association is reviving this Drummond island restoration project. At various times during the past years many persons, including our department, have tried to interest the public in it . . . It is an important matter to me. I have written and spoken on it many times. I am intimately acquainted with the history of this post and find it of surpassing interest, scarcely second to that of Mackinac itself.

"Any groups that underwrite this restoration will be entitled to the undying gratitude of those who cherish the history and traditions of their country. The department will be only too happy to be an agency in any such effort."

Dr. Madison Kuhn, East Lansing, president of the State Historical Society of Michigan, declared that the newspapers of the state had started something. "I hope they will succeed," he concluded. We quote from his letter:

"The description of your visit to Drummond Island accelerated my plans to visit the ground that the British thought was theirs. The State Historical Society still expects to hold one of its meetings on Drummond. The war's curtailment of travel forced the postponment of that inspection.

"The fort and its surroundings should not continue unkept and unmarked. Its remains must be saved, its debris must be removed, and its significance must be explained.

"Drummond Island has been off the beaten path but the coming expansion of air travel should make it an accessible monument. The State Aeronautical Board contemplates a Class 2 airport. The state conservation commission is engaged in the restoration of just such relics. The Michigan Historical society will renew its erection of commemorative markers when bronze is again available."

Dr. Kuhn expressed a hope that the state conservation department could be provided with sufficient funds to acquire the land and to restore the old Fort as Fort Mackinac and Fort Wilkins have been preserved and restored. Fort Mackinac is maintained by a state park commission, while Fort Wilkins is preserved by the conservation department as an adjunct to its state park at Copper Harbor.

Mid-way between Drummond island and the village of DeTour, on the mainland, is the DeTour reef lighthouse, a tall concrete-steel "isle" rising 74 feet above the level of Lake Huron. This lighthouse is maintained by the U. S. Coast Guard as a beacon and guide for the long ore boats which travel up and down the St. Mary's river in an endless procession from early spring until early winter.

Charles Jones, a coast guard civilian employee since 1922, is its proud keeper.

Climbing up a steel ladder along a 20-foot concrete wall, we greeted Jones and for 30 minutes the place was "ours". We ascended to the top and marveled at an intricately-made French prism in a revolving beacon, powered by only a 500-watt bulb, which reflects a finger of light visible 19 miles away.

We shook hands with Jones' helpers — Tom Brander, John Schrader and Bernard Rozmarynowski. The place was as spick and span as a Dutch housewife's kitchen.

Running a lighthouse is a steady chore. You are on duty four hours, off duty four hours, thruout the day and night. You are allowed five day's liberty each month. Uncle Sam throws in the air-conditioning free, for there's always a fine breeze and nary a mosquito, although plenty of flies and spiders.

Each man in this lighthouse cooks his own meals. Radio reception is good, as the station serves as a radio beacon for lake shipping and the government has installed super-super equipment, the best that money can buy.

During fogs an air-compressed horn moans incessantly. "But you get used to it," opined Jones, the keeper, "although it does get a bit monotonous after a day or two."

We had just left old Fort Drummond, once teeming with activity of some 350 to 400 red-coated British soldiers from 1815 to 1828. In their first winter there, following evacuation of Fort Mackinac to the Americans, many soldiers died from scurvy due to improper diet.

A week's rations in the winter of 1815-16 consisted of four lbs. of salt pork, six ounces of rice, six ounces of butter (usually rancid because of its age), seven lbs. of flour and three pints of dried peas. Hardly a vitamin in the batch!

Little wonder then that Lt. Col. McDonall, British commanding officer, dispatched an appeal to Fort Mackinac for food and medical supplies. The Americans responded with generosity, sending along an army surgeon for good measure.

Gazing out upon blue Lake Huron, we recalled how over these same waters once traveled the birch-bark canoes of Indians to Fort Drummond. Today the long slender ore boats — some of them valued at $2,000,000 each — set their course up and down the De-Tour passage of the St. Mary's river by the radio beacon, revolving light and fog horn of the De-Tour lighthouse.

Thus the new follows the old—like life itself.

Yet the new acquires additional value and significance when it is contrasted with the old. Such is the simple lesson taught by history.

Old Fort Drummond, now disappearing into the earth, should be acquired by the State of Michigan and restored to its original glory: The last British fort in Michigan during the days when two nations were struggling for supremacy of the Indinn fur trade of the Great Lakes.

COUNTY KITCHENS BECOME TIN MINES FOR WAR ITEM

Women of Charlevoix county can "mine" tin sufficient for 422 1½ ton Army trucks this year.

On the basis of last year's consumption, civilians will open 1,055,508 cans of food this year. According to a table recently issued by Washington, 2,500 cans provide tin sufficient for one 1½-ton Army truck.

Meanwhile, the armed forces consumed approximately three billion cans of food during 1943 and needs for the current year are expected to rise to three and a quarter billion cans. With a greatly increased number of the armed forces in overseas duty, more canned foods will be needed because the can has proved the most practical container for the shipment of foods abroad.

On the way home from town Saturday night with the week's supply of groceries, the fuel pump on Jesse Lawton's car went on a strike and no amount of coaxing would make it work, so there was nothing to do but go back to town and telephone for Lawrence Jensen to come to the rescue. Fortunately Jo Clark saw him walking back to town and gave him a lift to the office and back to the car, where he and his mother waited and watched the cars go by until Mr. Jensen's arrival.

Of all the men at the station I was the only one with that type so I volunteered. It was for a lady who had had a serious operation at the hospital. After going to the hospital and having some tests I gave her the pint of blood and returned to the base. That's one case where the North and the South mixed in a friendly way.

In the clipping I am sending, notice that the damages to Wilmington and its adjoining shipyards and beach resorts was estimated at $2,000,000.

Pvt. Allen Sterritt Writes Of Trip In New Guinea

Pvt. Allen Sterritt, grandson of Mrs. Ida Sterritt, who is in New Guinea with the army, writes of a trip in New Guinea.

It's been quite some time since I've written. During that period of time a lot has happened.

Last week I had an extremely interesting experience which I would like to relate to you for no other reason than that I think you would like to know.

Situated not too far from us is a battle area on which was fought one of the many campaigns of New Guinea. I had the privilege of visiting that area. If I were permitted to give you it's name you would remember the battle to which I refer. It wasn't a big fight like many of the others but the fighting was every bit ferocious in all respects. Though the action took place several months ago, the picture of what happened still remains, stark and revealing. Time has taken some of the goriness away but you can see the picture quite clearly. Most of us here at the camp have seen it.

It was early last Sunday that my two buddies and I decided to go and see for ourselves. We went because as soldiers we're curious about those things. We started at about eight in the morning and got our first ride which took us about two miles. Incidentally, over here, if you intend to go any distance you either walk or hitch hike. It wasn't long before we got our second ride. This time we had a little trouble. We turned left instead of right and were taken a few miles out of our way. Eventually we were brought back and put on the right road again by a negro driving an ambulance. We walked up to a rickety bridge and waited there well over half an hour. It seemed like everything that passed us was filled up. Finally we were picked up by an Australian officer driving a jeep. That ride took us all the way to our destination. By now we had acquired a thick coating of New Guinea dust on our faces and clothes.

Almost immediately I was looking at what I had come to see. The scene was a strip of beach about a quarter of a mile long with a small

FORECASTS BOOST IN DAIRY OUTPUT

Advocating that dairymen take steps now in anticipation of the post-war period and the problems that will arise, Earl Weaver, head of the Department of Dairy, Michigan State College, makes the sobering statement that lower milk prices coupled with dairy expansion can be expected after peace arrives.

Cautioning that no step should be taken now that would in any way interfere even remotely in the war program, Weaver believes that dairymen as individuals as well as the industry itself can contribute to the wider acknowledgement by consumers of the nutritive values and wholesomeness of dairy products.

"The time will come when consumer acceptance will be a major objective", the dairy head states. "Steps now to insure this objective offer great promise. Neglect of opportunities in this direction invites serious problems later."

Post-war conditions will make it essential for every successful dairyman to achieve greatest efficiency and economy in the operation of his herd, says Weaver. Approved practices in growing his feeds and in his feeding methods will be mandatory. Breeding, selection, production-testing that has been done, and the care exercised now in building a herd will be important points bearing on results. Only the good cow, not the average or mediocre one, can make her contribution.

Weaver pays tribute to the substantial dairy producers who have contributed to the war production effort in the face of handicaps that prevail during the war period. Many have greatly increased their dairy activities despite these difficulties.

DESPITE RAIN COUNTY PICNIC A SUCCESS

The 22nd Annual Charlevoix County Picnic attracted the usual big crowd in spite of threatening weather and showers throughout the day. Fortunately the weather cleared up shortly after 1:00, which permitted staging the educational and entertainment features of the day's activities.

Running races and contests for young and old were conducted at 1:30. Following this, the men's quartette from Boyne City sang two enjoyable numbers. A mixed chorus then gave several selections. Unfortunately quartettes from out of town failed to put in their appearance as the outlook during the forenoon was such that they felt that no program would be given.

Next Ardith and Vonda Howe, 4-H Club members from Charlevoix, gave a fine demonstration on how to store vegetables. These two girls have long been identified with the 4-H Club program. Two 4-H Club boys, Bud Murray and William Price of the Murray Club gave their demonstration on preparing the calf for exhibit. They showed how a calf can be thrown as one of the steps in 4-H Club dairy work. This attracted much attention and favorable comment.

Perhaps the most entertaining features were the two soft ball games that started at 3:00. One game played was between the 4-H Club boys of the county and the Future Farmers of America boys representing East Jordan and Boyne City combined. The 4-H Club boys won this game by a good margin. The next game between the Democrats and Republicans was a knockout. The boys were not satisfied with just a seven inning game so decided to play the full nine innings, with the result that the Democrats won, 12 to 7.

The exhibits were nicely arranged and most attractive in their natural setting. The 4-H Club exhibits were placed on tables in the open on the East end of the grounds, while the adults' exhibits were in the building to the South.

The day's activities were completed at 5:00 without any more difficulty with the weather. Thus again the Annual Labor Day Picnic has come and gone.

Only wish I had added a camera to my personal gear before pushing off from the good old U.S.A. I could surely get some good pictures to add to my collection of souvenirs.

The other day they had a little fishing party so I went along to try my luck. None of us had any but the next day we went back and caught quite a few colorful tropical fish. They're all different colors and really very beautiful. Oh yes, I caught one too, although I'm ashamed to admit it. It was only three inches long and after such luck I wound up my line and quit. One of these days I'll make up for that."

HOME TREAT IVY POISONING CASES

The large number of poison ivy cases throughout Michigan at this season of the year is overburdening hard-pressed doctors, taking their attention from the treatment of more serious ailments. With the objective of creating more widespread knowledge on methods of home treatment, Dr. Charles F. Holland, director of the Michigan State college health service, offers these suggestions:

For mild cases, phenolated calamine lotion provides relief from itching. Either a freshly prepared 5 per cent ferric chloride solution or 5 per cent potassium permanganate may be painted on small infected areas of skin, or a wet dressing of 1:4000 of potassium permanganate may be applied. Both the ferric chloride potassium permanganate have the objectionable feature of staining.

When swelling and much blistering are present, use wet dressings of Burrow's solution (aluminum acetate) diluted 1 part to 10 parts distilled water and applied cold. These dressings, along with tepid tub baths containing ½ cup of corn starch and soda (bicarbonate), furnish relief and control for the more uncomfortable cases.

Dr. Holland points out that many other remedies are used, the commonest being lead subacetate diluted 1 to 10 parts water; but this has no advantage over the Burrows dressing. Ointments should never be used in ivy poisoning until the acute stage is entirely subsided. After that, oxide may be useful in overcoming scaling and cracking of the skin.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

Like a postman who prefers a 10-mile hike for a holiday, a group of Michigan newspapermen journeyed recently to the Cassidy Lake "honor camp" of the state corrections commission, located in the Waterloo recreational area in Washtenaw and Jackson counties.

Then the newsmen innocently stumbled upon a series of news stories.

It was just 'one of those things' that makes Michigan so interesting.

For instance:

First, the escape of Norman Mundt, a life-term inmate member of the Jackson state prison band which had been detailed to Cassidy Lake for the day. Mundt was captured in 24 hours. It seems that he had selected, as haven of refuge, a nearby farmhouse owned by a Detroit policeman. Irony itself.

Second, a significant experiment in modern penology whereby 83 inmates from the Jackson prison — 36 of them being first offenders and 47 others being about to receive parole because of their good behavior — have been awarded partial freedom at an attractive lake camp that is entirely without walls or armed guards.

And third, a study in contrast, between two groups — six delinquent youths assigned to the camp by probate judges, and the 83 selected inmates from the main prison at Jackson.

The escape of Norman Mundt turned out to be one of the interesting incidents of the day. It was the unheralded, indirect result of a program of special entertainment which had been arranged by the corrections commission for the benefit of the visiting newsmen.

The program consisted of drills

OUR FARMERS ARE DOING A GREAT JOB...BUT NOW THEY NEED OUR HELP!

How much time can you spare to help pick the crops?

Right now there is an emergency in our neighboring farms! Many crops are near the point of harvesting, but there is a big shortage of regular farm workers to do the job.

And that is where we the citizens of this community come in!

The farmers need volunteers to help harvest the crops—especially fruits which are now ripening. This is an emergency—because nature can't wait. When the crops are ready, they must be picked at the time—or else they go to waste!

FOOD STILL AN URGENT PROBLEM

The war is going pretty well for us these days, but don't make the mistake of thinking the food crisis is over. Food is still the most single important weapon of war.

Go to, or telephone, the local office of your County Agent and register now to give our farmers a helping hand. You will be paid prevailing wages for your work, and what is more important, you will be helping in a national emergency by making a contribution that will help Uncle Sam to final Victory.

Playground News of Field and Stream

A three-legged fawn rescued from Saginaw Bay may owe its life to the gulls and terns that called attention to its plight.

Emil Keveresian of Turner and M. E. Kelley of Detroit, fishing for perch a mile off shore, rowed to the spot over which birds were circling, hoping to locate fish. Instead they found a tired fawn.

The animal was brought to Turner and will be placed with tame deer on the conservation department's Ogemaw game refuge.

The fawn may have lost the lower part of a hind leg when caught in a fence. The stump was healing. Dogs may have driven the fawn into the Bay.

September 10 deadline is announced by the conservation department for filing applications for signs and tickets used by Williamston plan farmer-hunter cooperatives.

Printing difficulties mean there can be no grace period for lagyard groups. The department furnishes individually printed signs and tickets to participating organizations.

Farmers enlisted under the Williamston plan welcome restricted numbers of hunters to their fields. The latter are pledged to protect farm property.

The plan has attracted wide attention as offering a practical means of bettering farmer-hunter relationships.

Duck hunters who want to place permanent blinds on those Michigan waters where their use is allowed have until September 10 to file applications for permits that establish priority rights to preferred locations. Permits issued on applications postmarked after September 10 will not carry priority numbers, the conservation department announces.

Only Michigan waters in which permanent blinds may be placed are Lake Leelanauw, Leelanau county; Round Lake; Grand Traverse and Kalkaska counties; Big Platte Lake, Benzie County; Houghton Lake, Muskegon Lake, Tawas bay on Lake Huron; Saginaw bay from Point Lookout in Arenac county to Pointe Aux Barques in Huron county, except that portion of Wildfowl bay lying south of a line extending from the Bayport fish docks to North Island; and in Anchor bay on Lake St. Clair from Perch Point to Point Huron and along the west shore from Point Huron to Grosse Point Village, where no such blind is to be more than one-half mile from the shore. No permanent blinds may be placed on other waters.

Permanent blinds must be placed at least 600 feet apart. Temporary blinds, for which no permits are needed, may be constructed within 100 feet of the shoreline or any well-defined weed bed in a lake.

Such training, between sunrise and sunset, may be continued until March 15, the conservation department announces. No firearms other than pistols and blank cartridges may be used while training dogs.

Pinconning township in Bay county is the only area in Michigan still under quarantine. The quarantine expires there September 19.

"Sure thing, Tim. Here's what I told him, Charlie. There's no such thing as votin' a nation, a state, a county, or even a community dry. We had proof enough of that during our 13 years of prohibition. What you really vote for is whether liquor is going to be sold legally or illegally...whether the community is going to get needed taxes for schools, hospitals, and the like, or whether this money is going to go to gangsters and bootleggers. The Men Doing Our Fighting are Doing a Lot of Thinking

They are wondering what will happen when they return. Will there be jobs and opportunities to get ahead?

Michigan, under Republican leadership, already has the answer to that question.

The present Republican administration has created the office of Veterans' Affairs to help and advise veterans. Large appropriations have already been made to aid veterans in emergencies and for an adult education program. Michigan's rehabilitation arrangements are unequalled by any other state in the union.

At a recent state convention, the American Legion men who know what is being accomplished have gone on record as follows:

"Be it resolved that the American Legion in Convention assembled at Grand Rapids, Michigan, August 11, 1944, go on record as commending the Governor and members of the 1944 Michigan State Legislature for their sincere interest in the returning veterans and the comprehensive program presented which includes the creation of the Office of Veterans' Affairs to provide veterans with information, advice, direction and assistance through coordination of programs and services in the fields of education, health, vocational guidance and placement, together with mental care and economic security; to also establish community counseling centers for referral to all Service Agencies."

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL 1944-1945

least three units in one field of academic work such as English (I, II, III and IV,) mathematics, (algebra, geometry, advanced algebra and solid geometry), sciences (biology, chemistry, physics), social science (world history, American history, U. S. Goverament and economics.) A minor sequence consists of only two units instead of three in one field of academic work. General mathematics, general science, and general business cannot be included among any arrangement of sequences.

No student should expect to elect more than four courses or subjects unless unusually good marks have been maintained and excellent reasons are available for more than four subjects.

Experience has shown that some students select so-called easier courses only to regret such selection later. If a student's marks have been of a C plus ratiag or better and he has any idea of attending college, his logical selection of courses should include mathematics and sciences and possibly four semesters of a language other than English.

Courses will be Available as Follows:

Ninth grade: English I, algebra, general mathematics, general business, general science, general shop (two periods are required for one unit of credit), sewing (two periods are required for one unit of credit), Latin I, and ninth grade civics.

Tenth grade: English II, geometry, world history, biology, speech, bookkeeping, (other courses may be selected from the ninth grade list if not passed previously.)

Eleventh grade: English III*, American history*, (chemistry is offered in alternate years so is not available for 1944-45 but will be for 1945-46), physics (a regular laboratory period must be scheduled with the usual class room period.) typing (two periods are required for one unit of credit), shorthand (this depends upon the number of pupils electing it), mechanical drawing (two periods are required for one unit of credit), other courses not passed previously may be elected to complete a student's schedule as long as such election is from the tenth grade list only. In only unusual cases will permission be granted to elect ninth grade courses when enrolled in the eleventh grade.

Twelfth grade: English IV*, U. S. Government* and economics*, other courses from previous lists except the ninth grade may be used to complete schedules.

One quarter of one unit of regular academic credit will be possible for each year of creditable work in band. Credit will be available only when the senior band work has been completed satisfactorily.

Unless approximately fifteen pupils enroll in an elective course, such a course is subject to being dropped.

The Charlevoix School District provides textbooks for pupils.

In a few of the courses there are special fees such as general shop—one dollar, and mechanical drawing—fifty cents. Workbooks and similar types of special equipment of a personal nature are to be furnished by individual students.

Thad Phibbs' Formula for Fun

Thad Phibbs has a theory of enjoyment all his own. The more tired he is from working at the War Plant, the more fun he has pitching horseshoes with the boys these summer evenings.

"That's because I feel that I deserve it," Thad says simply.

And I wonder if he isn't right. I wonder if we don't enjoy things in proportion as we know we've earned them. Is a little relaxation ever more welcome than after a hard day's work? Do we appreciate our little pleasures quite as much as when we know in our hearts we've done a good job well?

From where I sit, that's one of the things this wartime strain has taught us. We're all of us working hard at our jobs, doing our level best to pull our weight. And we're learning the little rewards, the simple pleasures—a home-cooked meal, a glass of beer with friends—are more welcome now than ever... because we've earned them!

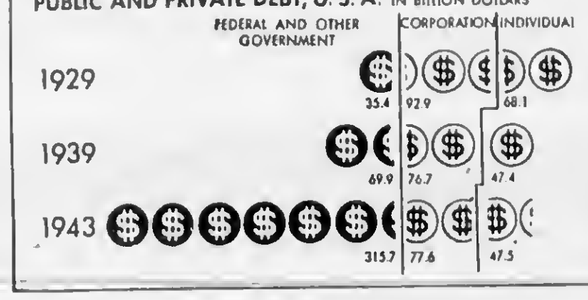
Nazis Fall Back Toward Border Under Attack of Allied Columns; 'Big Four' Shape Postwar World

Released by Western Newspaper Union

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

TELEFACT

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE DEBT, U. S. A. IN BILLION DOLLARS



EUROPE:
Clearing France

With swift Allied columns hacking at their hard-pressed flanks in the north, remnants of German Marshal von Kluge's Seventh army straggled across the Seine toward the borders of their homeland, while in the south, other Allied mechanized forces swept forward before weak resistance.

Having pulled the bulk of his Seventh army out of the Falaise-Argentan trap in Normandy, von Kluge confronted another immediate threat when dashing Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton raced his armored columns to the retreating Germans' rear along the Seine river and harassed their crossing.

With Patton's men slashing the enemy's flanking rearguards near the Seine, British and Canadian troops pressed against the Nazis from the north of this pocket, and all the while swarms of Allied planes roared overhead, bombing the Germans' frantic withdrawal eastward.

As the Allies by-passed Paris to concentrate on the crumbling German defenses in the north, that famed French capital fell to Patriot forces after brisk skirmishing inside the city with Nazi rear-guards.

Armed patriots also were rising throughout all of southern France as Allied armies drove northward from beachhead positions along the Riviera and around Bordeaux. Meeting slight German resistance in the scenic mountain country, the U. S. and Free French columns fanned out in all directions, while big cities like Marseilles, Grenoble and Lyon came within their grasp.

The French political picture took another quick turn, with Gen. Charles de Gaulle established firmly on home soil, and the Collaborationist government of Pierre Laval in exile. Having refused to leave French soil, 88-year-old Chief of State Marshal Petain reportedly was taken prisoner by the Germans.

Aided by mobile surgery and reconditioning treatment, 96 per cent of the wounded American soldiers have recovered, with about two-thirds returning to duty, the war department said. From figures compiled between June 25 and July 25, the department said 23 per cent of the men released from hospitals with serious physical limitations elected to remain in service.

EASTERN FRONT:
Fighting Stiffens

With the Germans standing their ground and beginning to fight back after deep withdrawals into central Europe, the war increased in intensity on the eastern front, with the Russians still knocking hard at the door to East Prussia.

While bitter fighting raged on the East Prussian border, Nazi troops to the north cleared a corridor to their Baltic armies previously shut off by a quick Russian thrust to the Gulf of Riga.

In the flaming fight for Warsaw, Russian troops gained ground to the northeast of the city in bitter tank and infantry battles, while south of the city, the Reds brought up additional forces west of the Vistula river to menace the flat, plains country leading to the border of the Silesian industrial province of Germany.

Equally stubborn fighting flared on the northern Romanian border, where the Russians drove for the rich Ploesti oil fields. Early fighting was marked by the Germans' abandonment of the big industrial city of Iassi, hub of the Nazis' successful defense of the region last spring.

MISCELLANY

BLOOD BY AIR: Transport of whole blood to combat zones by airplane has been inaugurated. For some purposes it has been found that whole blood containing red corpuscles, is more successful than blood plasma. The Red Cross office announces that 1,000 more pints of blood from donors will be needed daily as a result of the new shipments.

POSTWAR PEACE:
Powers Confer

With representatives of the U. S., Great Britain and Russia sitting down to discuss postwar peace plans at the quaint Dumbarton Oaks estate in Washington, D. C., favor was shown the U. S. proposal for organization of a world assembly under leadership of the big powers, which would use force, if necessary, to suppress aggression. Because Russia is not at war with Japan, China was not to join in the conference until the Reds left.

As the meeting got under way, American participation promised to be of a non-partisan, non-political nature, with John Foster Dulles, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's advisor on foreign affairs, consulting with Secretary of State Cordell Hull on the course of the conferences. Hull extended an invitation to Dewey to participate in the discussions following the latter's apprehensions that the interests of smaller nations might be overlooked.

Before force would be employed under plans discussed by the conferees, attempts would be made to settle disputes peacefully, with a world court provided for adjudication. Promotion of world prosperity was recognized as an important factor in the maintenance of stability.

DEMOBILIZATION:
Gradual Process

Although from one to two million American soldiers may be released upon the defeat of Germany, their discharge will not be accomplished "in one day," Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey declared.

"If we let out 1,000 an hour," General Hershey said, "it will still take 10 months to get rid of 2,000,000 to 2,500,000 men."

Although endorsing the system of gradual demobilization when the war ends, General Hershey admitted its unpopularity. Said he: ". . . When the war is over, people want their boys to come home."

Even after Germany is defeated, General Hershey said, the present induction of between 70,000 to 100,000 men a month will continue to remain in force.

PACIFIC:
Soften Foe

As U. S. ground troops prepared for further assaults on the strategic outer defense system of the enemy, American bombers ranged over the whole western Pacific, softening up the Japs' military installations.

While the Americans girded for new blows, they tightened their grip on the Mariana islands, where 44,956 Japanese fell in the conquest of Saipan, Tinian and Guam, with a U. S. loss of 4,470 killed, 721 missing and 20,345 wounded.

In ranging the Pacific, American bombers walloped Paramushiro in the north and the Carolines and Marshalls to the south, while still other wingmen under General MacArthur's command blasted enemy islands leading to the Philippines and shipping plying in nearby waters.

GI SPORTS

Servicemen overseas will soon get the benefit of an expanded entertainment and sports program, Lieut. Col. Henry Clark, head of the athletic branch of the special services division plans to organize championship contests between various units to stimulate competition and interest. Most popular games, Colonel Clark found, are softball, volleyball, boxing and horseshoes. These require less room and equipment than baseball or football.

COTTON:
Wants Parity

Advising cotton growers to keep their product off the market to boost prices, Sen. John H. Bankhead (Ala.) declared his willingness to fight to Christmas to bring returns up to parity.

Sponsor of an amendment to the price control bill ordering increases in textile prices to reflect parity, Bankhead conferred with manufacturers, shippers and government officials on means of raising cotton returns, with consideration given loans from 95 to 97½ per cent of parity as a last resort if other methods fail.

In advocating withholding of cotton from the market, Bankhead clashed with famed Georgian Agrarian Tom Linder, who said such action would result in the government dumping its stocks to further aggravate the price situation. Countering Linder's statement, Bankhead said that with prices now depressed because of insufficient demand, farmers should put their cotton in loan until a profitable marketing program was developed.

FUEL:
Supplies Cut

With demands exceeding production, civilian stores of industrial fuel oils, heating oils and gasoline declined 32 per cent from the fall of 1941, Deputy Petroleum Administrator Ralph K. Davies reported.

Next to industrial fuel, stocks of gas showed the biggest decrease, being 63 per cent of 1941 supplies. From July 1 to August 5, Davies said, shipments exceeded production by 95,000 barrels a day, with stock totalling 43,036,000 barrels as of the latter date.

Reserves of heating oils showed the smallest dip, being 88 per cent of the 1941 figure.

VETERINARIANS:
Report Progress

Approximately 100,000 dairy cows in New Jersey, New York and Wisconsin received artificial insemination in 1943, Dr. C. S. Bryan of East Lansing, Mich., told the American Veterinary Medical association convention in Chicago.

Delegates also were told of plans to provide for equal distribution of veterinarians throughout the country after the war, and of the current practice of promoting preventive medicine through proper nutrition, breeding, management and sanitation.

Speaking of artificial insemination, Dr. Bryan declared: "The advantages of the method, such as extending the usefulness of outstanding sires and providing thousands of dairy herds with the services of prize bulls which would otherwise not be available to them, are obvious."

News Briefs

As a product of Japan's current deliberations on postwar problems, the Tokyo radio said, Nipponese statesmen have conceived the development of a co-prosperity sphere based upon division of the world into three spheres of influence—East Asiatic, North and South American, and European with leader nations in each one promoting neighborliness, joint defense and business.

Back from a tour of Soviet Russia, Eric Johnston, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, declared: "In my travels I have rediscovered America. Never before did I realize the importance of our freedom, our standard of living, our right of habeas corpus, our bill of rights. . . ."

If plans materialize, the Erie railroad's 4 per cent first mortgage bonds issued in 1847 will be retired. Due in 1947, the bonds are the oldest railroad securities outstanding.

JAP RELOCATION:
Seek Return to Coast

Three American citizens of Japanese descent—one the widow of a Japanese-American soldier killed in action, and another a discharged U. S. vet—filed a writ in federal court in San Francisco, Calif., seeking the right to reestablish residence on the Pacific coast.

Although the complainants did not challenge the validity of the original exclusion order, they said that grounds for its further enforcement no longer existed, in view of the fact that there was no apparent danger of a Japanese invasion and the army itself has recognized this by taking such steps as cancellation of dim-out regulations on the west coast.

Of 112,000 Japanese Americans evacuated from the Pacific coast, some 70,000 of loyal character scattered throughout relocation camps in the west would be affected by the decision. Another 27,000 have been relocated in jobs elsewhere in the country, while 18,000 disloyal Japanese-Americans have been segregated at Tule Lake, Calif.

LIVING COSTS

A slight rise in the cost of living took place in July, the National Industrial Conference board reports. For the country as a whole the increase was 06 per cent as compared with June. Sixty-three industrial cities are included in the monthly survey. In all but six the cost items advanced.

The largest rise was in Trenton, N. J., where a jump of 2.2 per cent was noted. Declines were few and small, the greatest being only .01 per cent in Spokane, Wash.

500 Devices Aid In Air Training

Simulate Flying Effects in Range of Battle and Storm Conditions.

WASHINGTON.—Five hundred devices, many of them original inventions, which simulate flying effects ranging from enemy gunfire to tropical storms, have been turned out by the navy in 2½ years for training of its aviators.

At headquarters of the division of special devices, bureau of aeronautics, directed by Capt. Lois de Florez, engineering genius concentrates on simplifying for learning purposes all the complex aviation equipment which that genius has produced.

Such an instrument, for instance, as the PBM-3 flight engineer's panel gives a student training which is practically identical with that he would receive behind the controls of a Martin Mariner in flight. The panel is connected with an instructor's control board, allowing him to check student operations, or to complicate them by introducing synthetic storm, battle and accident conditions.

Intuitive Reactions Follow.

By development of intuitive reactions, by telescoping military study all the way from high mathematical theory down to synthetic battle conditions, the devices produce practical results without tying up combat equipment and without interfering with combat activities, Captain De Florez pointed out.

Great Britain gets the devices through lend-lease and other Allied powers wish to do so. Before the division was established, the navy studied British developments in this field. Captain De Florez continues to keep in close contact with laboratories in England. He also has gone into the Pacific theater to observe the navy's use of the devices.

The most remarkable training inventions and the drama of their development are restricted information. However, the reputation of the division for solving critical training problems has caused it to receive special requests for inventions not only for training, but for battle, to be used by the army as well as the navy.

For example, on order from North Africa, the division developed and delivered in 13 days a "perspective sketcher" which was used in the invasion of Sicily. This mechanical pencil automatically draws land contours as they will appear at specified altitudes and angles of flight approach.

For free gunnery proficiency a device has been invented whereby fire can be directed at motion-picture targets from the simulated turret of a bomber. To develop fighter-plane gunner technique a "gunairstructor" has been conceived. In this machine, by operating the controls in a forward cockpit, a pilot maneuvers an "enemy plane" on a motion-picture screen, while another pilot in a rear cockpit makes the plane turn red every time he makes a hit.

The training methods apply to all fields of naval aviation, not only to gunnery but to navigation, recognition, bombing, torpedo, radio, instrument flying and high-altitude work. In a celestial navigational trainer a crew of four can simulate an all-night flight under revolving stars. "Cones of fire," or the attack angles which involve the least amount of defensive fire in approaching certain types of aircraft, are taught simply by the painted and unpainted areas on transparent globes constructed around plane models.

Cadets receive blind-flying instruction from phonograph records and improve their radio voices with recording machines. Distributed around the halls and lounges of naval air schools are popular information machines which operate question-and-answer games on the pin-ball principle.

'What Day Is It?' Brings 7 Different Answers.

SOUTH PACIFIC.—The American tradition of a 5½ day work week with Saturday afternoon and all day Sunday off is out for the duration for America's fighting men just as it is out in many sections of the United States.

In South Pacific combat areas, troops sometimes do not have the satisfaction of knowing that it is Saturday or Sunday. Church services are held several times daily behind the front lines because it would be a little embarrassing to have the Jap call on a Sunday and find everyone attending religious services.

Even "Blue Monday" has no terrors for the fighting man. He can't stay out later than usual on Saturday night because he can't spend Sunday morning in his foxhole bed. Besides if he could stay up late on Saturday night, he would be running considerable danger of a Jap stealing up behind him intent on mayhem.

Therefore, troopers have a difficult time keeping up with the days unless they do a Robinson Crusoe and keep score on a tree with their jungle knives. At one meeting of soldiers someone requested information as to what day of the week it happened to be. Seven different answers resulted.

The date of the month is also a frequent matter for an all-out discussion. One of the best ways people back in the States have of finding out the date is to look in their newspapers or consult their favorite calendar.

But troops can't find solace in their papers because newspapers arrive two and three months after date of publication. And the folks back home never send calendars, evidently afraid that the troops might look upon the offering as an omen that they're going to be overseas an awfully long time. Army men have a difficult enough time determining the month without getting down to the finer points.

Yes, the old 5½ day week is out for the duration and some of the troops long overseas wonder if they can ever get back into the habit of a half-day holiday on Saturday and all-day Sunday for extra-curricular activity.

Sheep Supplement

Soybean oil meal is equal to linseed meal or cottonseed meal in value per ton as a protein supplement for sheep. In some experiments soybean oil meal produced more rapid gains than cottonseed meal for fattening lambs. The feed cost per pound of gain was less and the soybean oil meal was slightly superior to cottonseed meal in producing a desirable finish. The proportion of soybean oil meal to use in rations for fattening lambs is about one pound for every seven pounds of corn.

Twelve Elements Control Fertility

Vital Soil Chemicals Determine Growth

Fertility was described as the "fourth dimension" of the soil by Dr. William A Albrecht, chairman of the soils department of the University of Missouri, in a recent statement.

"The soil has taken on a new meaning in the light of present war conditions," he pointed out. "Ration points on food and the scarcity of items like meat, milk and butter are giving soil a significance beyond that of mere dirt.

"Soil has long had two dimensions —length and breadth. As land, it has commonly been measured in terms of acres. The Soil Conservation service first emphasized that our lands have a third dimension—depth. Erosion studies as early as 1914 by Dean Miller and Dr. Duley at Columbia made us see the soil profile with its rich surface being scraped away and washed to the sea.

"To these three dimensions, however, should be added a fourth—fertility—for food production essentially depends on this factor.

"Crops are a form of creation. Like the Biblical story of creation itself, crops must also begin with the soil. About a dozen different chemical elements are required of the soil by any crop. These make up the ash, amounting to approximately 5 per cent by weight of the dry matter. Yet, it is this small amount contributed by the soil that determines whether the plant can gather from the air and water, by means of sunshine power, the other 95 per cent of its total content.

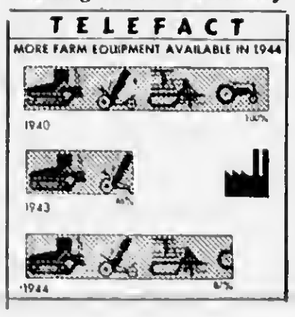
The Controlling Elements.

"These 12 chemical elements making up by 5 per cent by weight are thus able to control the other elements which make up 95 per cent of the total weight of the plant. Consequently it becomes evident that the soil rather than the weather wields the controlling hand in crop production."

In discussing further this "fourth dimension" of the soil, Dr. Albrecht pointed out that in a series of tests for producing soybeans as a seed crop, plots without fertilizer treatment on one farm yielded 20 bushels of seed, whereas adjoining plots supplied with extra soil fertility plowed down as fertilizers, yielded 25 bushels, or an increase of 25 per cent.

"When it is considered that both plots had the same weather," he concluded, "there should be little doubt that the crop depends on the soil fertility more than on the season. We thus need to see our responsibility to the soil more, and to blame the weather less."

Making More Machinery



Sulfaguanidine Saves Chickens and Calves

A new addition to the sulfa drugs, all of which are derived from coal, will soon be used to increase the nation's supply of poultry and dairy products by combatting cecal coccidiosis, deadly disease of chickens and dairy calves, which costs farmers millions of dollars every year, according to the Bituminous Coal Institute.

The drug is sulfaguanidine which, in tests supervised by the United States department of agriculture, not only prevented development of the disease in healthy birds but cut the mortality rate among infected poultry to 12 per cent of the former figure, the announcement said. In each case, the chickens were fed a mash containing from one-half to one per cent of the drug.

"One of the advantages indicated by the experiments is that the treatment builds up immunity against reinfection," the institute pointed out. "Instead of killing all of the infecting organisms, the sulfa compound merely arrests development of the disease, thus enabling the body mechanism to build up an immunity."

Horning In

By JEAN CAMERON

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

WHEN the car came abreast of the running girl in the trench coat the horn sounded raucously once, twice. She hesitated a moment, tugged her hat over her loose curls and jumped in. "So chemicals help drafting—thank you," she said.

The sandy-haired man behind the driver's seat looked at her gloomily. While her face was unfamiliar, he knew draftswomen had been employed for some weeks now. "How far, Miss—"

"To the highway intersection, please. Kay Farnham. I'll be quiet," she added, after another glance at the strong chin. "I know you're planning explanations for the Government inspection committee tomorrow."

The chin stiffened perceptibly. So the Government committee was coming, eh? The drive was a silent one. At the highway Donald crawled out and opened the door for his passenger. She smiled. "You're the first man to do that in two months, Mr. McAllister. And—and I am highly flattered that you took me home." He did not realize that the girl remained standing in the street until his car vanished from sight. She had noticed him in the halls and offices for some time.

McAllister was angry, with a cold, calculated, frightening rage that had been developing for many weeks. Let Wilson run the chemical department as he ran and bullied everyone else—all right, just so long as he kept out of McAllister's way; let him have the soundproof laboratory, priorities, assistants—all right. He himself would work overtime, be underpaid, refuse better offers—all right. If this experiment succeeded —if he could work it out and it was accepted, it would be worth all of Wilson's sacers. He'd have done his part.

But the Government inspectors were coming tomorrow and not to test his model or his method! Well . . . his temper at a fine edge, he swung and headed back to the factory.

In spite of his pugnacious look, his height and his square shoulders, there was a mildness about Donald —something in the color of his hair, the blue of his eyes, his general absent-mindedness—which led people to think him timid. He had never cared, for he believed in attending strictly to his own business. And yet perhaps it was Cornelia's treatment which had helped to produce his present fury.

Cornelia believed in Cornelia first, peace or war. She was soft, blonde, helpless, appealing to big men. She demanded things and got them. And now that so many men were gone she had been concentrating on Donald with excellent results.

There was a quick hush as he entered the office, a bending of heads back to work. He glanced toward his desk; his lips tightened. "I thought I told you to stay out of my things, Wilson," he said slowly, striding over to his private corner.

A beefy, self-confident man swung about. "I was looking for a pencil," he grinned, nonchalantly ignoring the fact that two projected from his breast pocket. Donald controlled himself with a conscious effort and closed the desk top. He felt rather than saw Wilson's foot moving the wastebasket into a tripping position behind him, and kicked backward so violently that the basket shot between his annoyer's legs and he fell headlong.

He was up in an instant, furious, his fists lifted, but Donald's look lowered them. "Can't you take a joke, McAllister?" he asked feebly, realizing that his long domination of the office was crashing and that the story would soon sweep the whole plant.

"No," snapped Donald. He tramped across the room and slammed the sales manager's door behind him. "No, Mr. Bentley, you're not too busy to listen to me," he said, and poured out every demand he had formulated during his drive—better instruments, additional quarters, storage space, and full hearing before the committee. "I came here to work," he concluded. "If I can't do that here I'll go where I can. Pay Wilson what you want for making a general nuisance of himself. Give him any title you like—but let me do a good job!"

"Of course," gasped the sales manager. "Naturally. We thought you were quite satisfied, Mr. McAllister. We'll have a new contract for you in the morning. We . . ." Donald turned and left.

In the outer office a stenographer came up to him. "A lady has been calling," she reported. "Miss Cornelia Adkins, she said."

Donald did not pause. "Tell her I haven't come in."

In the lab he pulled on his rubber gloves. He was quite calm now. He would get right at that new solvent. But first—he pulled off the gloves, made a notation on his calendar—"Take girl in drafting room to lunch after committee report tomorrow."

Nice girl, he thought, arranging bottles carefully on the sink. He'd tell her—no, women were funny. Better not tell her he hadn't meant to pick her up, that when he bent over to rescue his fountain pen from the floor of the car he had accidentally pressed the horn.

PVT. ALLEN STERRITT WRITES OF TRIP IN NEW GUINEA

river dividing it in the center and emptying into the sea. The beach was sandy and the water ran shallow a long way out. There was no apparent sign of coral reefs off shore.

All along the shore lay the ruins of war, the water lapping around them and forming little pools as it ran back to the sea. As I walk along there is a lot that meets the eye. There are torn landing barges, some broken in half by the relentless waves. I pass two tugs which have huge, gapping holes in their sides and only portions of their decks still intact. Further on I come to the wing of an ill-fated plane, ripped off and now half buried in the shifting sands. Twenty yards up the beach lay it's twisted, battered landing gear.

This is not all I see. In a clump of kuni grass rests the fire-scarred cab of a truck, riddled with bullet holes. The once stately palms are now shredded derelicts. Their six to twenty feet stumps are splintered where the tops have been blown off by the terrific artillery fire. Very few of them fail to bear the unsightly scars of shrapnel embedded deep in their trunks. What an artillery barrage there must have been here.

At somewhat regular intervals, there are what is left of gun emplacements, the sand banked high around the brim of each pit. One in particular has oil drums placed around it and camoflaged with palm leaves. Everywhere there are round foxholes and shallow slit trenches. At high tide these are half filled with water. On either side of each is littered the now rusty tin cans which held the meat of C rations. Also there are shattered cocoanut shells, evidence that C rations become mighty tiring when eaten day after day.

Further inland the jungle becomes thick with vegetation and the ground is wet and swampy. This sector is infested with insects of all sizes and shapes but the foxholes are no less scarce, sufficient proof of the hardships encountered. Occasionally there is a dugout, hurriedly abandoned by a pounded enemy. In the sand I catch sight of three clips of unfired .30 caliber ammunition. They're so rusty it's impossible to tell whether they had been ours or theirs.

Seeing a sight such as this makes me think of many things. Mostly I think of the men who fought and died here. God rest their souls. How they must have suffered and endured. There was many a sleepless night they spent in their wet foxholes, watching and waiting. I think of them coming in, in landing barges, spilling out on the beach, fighting for every inch of ground and paying for it with their life's blood. What of the lonely nights when they thought of home, their wives, their families, their sweethearts. My thoughts inevitably center on the men who emerged from the campaign sick, wounded and mentally stunned, yet victorious in combat!

We can look at photographs and read all day of this sort of thing but you have to see it with your own eyes to get the really true picture and even then all is not visible for only the men themselves hold the secret to what we can't ever see. It's a picture you don't forget whether you participated in the action or not!

This is the account of what I saw and what I thought on a lonely strip of beach in New Guinea.

Jack and Jill
Went up the hill
To fetch waste paper piled there,
To bomb Berlin
And help us win
And make the Nazis riled there.

Get your waste paper out where it can be seen by the truckers, next week, September 13 and 14.

by the Michigan State Zouaves, a group of prison inmates, garbed in the traditional military costumes of the original French zouaves — red fez hats with black tassels, red jackets, bright blue knickers, white blouses with white sash, and white stockings and white shoes.

The zouaves stomped through precision maneuvers, carrying wood rifles. It was a splended performance.

Next was a group of entertainers — a 15-piece band that did its stuff as equally well with popular dance numbers as classical pieces; a xylophonist - drummer - fiddler who had murdered somebody in Detroit and was sent up for life; four Negro singers, called the "Swanee Quartet"; a hard-working Negro tap dancer, and four hill-billy singers known musically on the radio as the "Arkansas Ramblers."

The generous efforts of these entertainers were given a night club setting — and most unfortunately and unfairly so — by a breezy, flippant master of ceremonies, one Bob Hart, formerly of a deceased Jackson night club, whose fashion ensemble included these nifty effects: Bright yellow nylon sport shirt, a flamboyantly bright red tie, and a stiff straw sailor. He announced the numbers and wisecracked a few funny stories.

By the way, the 15-piece band was reduced to 14 pieces when Mundt took a walk.

Mundt had been sentenced to the Jackson prison for life, following conviction in 1938 for committing robbery while armed. Out at Cassidy Lake, where the blue sky and green trees and nearby placid lake gave him the inspiration, Mundt just disappeared when all three guards were not looking.

Warden Jackson had just concluded a luncheon talk at the dining hall, voicing a prophecy that were the walls of the Jackson prison to fall due to earthquake, most of the prisoners would remain there, awaiting their guards.

It was then that an official entered the hall and handed Jackson a slip of paper. It was about Mundt.

In his futile flight Mundt had broken into a nearby farmhouse, and had been welcomed there the next day by its owner who of all persons in the world happened to be a Detroit policeman, Carlton Engstrom. Mundt slugged Engstrom with the handle of a hammer, but was captured a few minutes later by a Chelsea officer. Now he can look forward to solitary confinement.

The experiment of Cassidy Lake was characterized by Dr. Garret Heyns, director of the corrections commission, to be "one of the most progressive things we have attempted in a long time." Its leader is an understanding man, Lieut. George F. Parrish, himself an orphan, who handles boys with rare patience and intelligence.

Instead of bare prison walls that imply a denial of freedom, Cassidy Lake honor camp is an attractive, modern outdoors resort. Its buildings are of logs, patterned after the federal park architecture of Yellowstone Park. Camp inmates live in home-like cabins, overlooking the lake and situated among trees.

They attend classes four hours a day for academic education and another four hours daily for vocational training that is designed to provide them with a useful vocation for the "free world."

Since last November 15, when the camp opened, Cassidy Lake had not experienced one fist fight. The honor system is supreme.

Last spring the boys asked Lieutenant Parrish, whose military title comes from twelve years' service in the United States army, for permission to arrange a Mother's Day program.

"But don't go near the 'wreck' building (recreation)", the boys pleaded. "We want to surprise you."

Big-hearted Warden Jackson was there. Imagine this, from a bunch of lads who had troubled their mothers no end: A church choir!

Singing lustily in the first row, side by side, were a Catholic, Protestant and a Mexican.

This church choir has given concerts in Chelsea and surrounding towns. The church ladies cooperate, too, with ice cream and cake. Well — and why not?

What to do with the juvenile delinquents — six lads who have been assigned to the camp by Michigan probate judges, as part of the state's new delinquent youth program — is Lieutenant Parrish's current problem.

And, here, strangely enough, is an unexpected contrast. The 83 inmates from Jackson represent about one and one-half per cent of the state prison's population. They are carefully selected for good behavior.

Most of the juveniles have long police records — some longer than records of first offenders at the prison. No screening has been done; they are boys in the raw. About the most than can be said of one lad, who is the by-product of a mate swamping spree in the Thumb a few years ago is this: "A pair of pants walking around."

Cassidy Lake is a challenge to Michigan. We believe it will make good.

THREE SCHOOL PROPOSALS ARE TO BE VOTED ON THURSDAY EVENING

The following is a brief statement concerning the three proposals which will be voted upon by the people of the local school district on the evening of Thursday, September 14, 1944.

Further statements and explanations will be given out at the meeting on the night of the voting.

Proposal I

1. To raise the tax limitation for school purposes from 15 mills to 20 mills for a period of five years.

A. Explanation.

The reason for needing a rnise in this limitation is to be able to levy a tax in case the School District needs more money for operational expenses of the school.

By rnising of the limitation for a five-year period does not neeessarily mean that the tax will be levied for 5 years. This proposul is only asking permission to raise the limitation for tive years in ease the District needs it. This means that an election will NOT have to be held each year.

Proposal II

1. This proposal is to levy a tax of 5 mills over the fifteen mill limitation for a period of 1 year.

A. Reason for the need of extra money.

The cost of maintaining a school has gone up the same as in most types of other businesses. Snlaries have increased to keep pace with the increased cost of living.

However, the enrollment of the school has decreased and this is the item upon which our State Aid is based. This means that we will have less money from the State. Money that has been coming in from closed banks and from delinquent taxes will not be coming in to the treasurer. These different items plus teachers salaries, over the year 1943-44, show that we will not have within $10,000 to $12,000 enough money to run the school for the year 1944-45.

However, the Board is trying to help make up the deficit by having the outlying districts pay higher tuition rates and by changing to a Township Unit.

Proposal III

1. To change the Charlevoix Public School System from a Graded School District to a Township Unit District.

A. Explanation of reason for wanting such a change.

1. The Graded School District and the Township are what is known as being Co-terminus. This means that they have the same boundary lines. In the past, it has been the policy of the Board of Education to let students from the Charlevoix District No. 1 ride on the bus to and from school. Because this district is a Graded School District, it did not receive transportation reimbursement from the Department of Public Instruction.

Last year the cost of transportation per child amounted to $33.06.

There were 60 students from the Charlevoix District No. 1 riding on the buses. This means that the District lost $1,983.60. This amount is determined by dividing the cost of the ase of the bus by the aumber of riders.

By changing to a Towaship Unit, the District will be reimbursed by the Department of Public Instruction for the students that ride on the bas from this District.

If the Change is evnted, it will be necessary to elect a new Board of Education — under the supervision of the County Commissioner of Schools.

As far as the School District is concerned, there will be no other change what-so-ever.

Shaves and Shines Given to Invasion Yanks

Because few Chinese have any hair on their faces until they reach an advanced age, the shaving engaged in by American soldiers seems to be a most anusual operation. Here, Corp. Harvey H. Powell, a horse shoer with a veterinary company in China, but a barber on the side, exercises his tonsorial art on Pvt Stanley C. Phillips of Dayton, Ohio, to the amusement of Chinese soldiers. Pfc. James P. Royle, Boston, Mass., wants to look neat during the invasion, so Italian youngster shines up his shoes. Italian youngsters soon found that they could earn good money with a shoe shining kit in almost any camp.

Fire Destroys Barn and Contents

Fire of an unknown cause completely destroyed the barn and its contents which included about 70 tons of hay on the Sam Gettleton farm, formerly known as the Paldork farm, on Route 1, near Barnard, early Monday morning. The tenants, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence McClnnaghan, were awakened about 1:30 a.m. and found the building in flames.

Finding it impossible to save the building, the Charlevoix Fire Department devoted its efforts to saving nearby buildings. Losses included several farm animals, more than a hundred chickens and guinea hens and a combine. Fire Chief Charles Marshall would not make an estimate of the loss, stated it was at least partially covered by insurance. Mr. and Mrs. Gettleton, owners of the farm reside in Detroit.

Flying Officer Edwin E. McCann, 29, of the RCAF has been reported missing after air operations overseas on September 6, according to a telegram received on Sunday from the RCAF Casualties Office, Ottawa, Ont., by his father, John McCann, of Muskegon and his sisters, Mrs Versal Seymour and Mrs. John B. Martin of this city.

He had enlisted in the Royal Canadian Air Force in July, 1941, and received his training at Regina, Sask., Brandon, Man., Prince Edward Island and Halifax, N. S. He went overseas in November, 1942, and has been stationed in Scotland where he was engaged in reconnaissance duty with the RCAF. His work also included rescue daty off the coast of Scotland.

Besides his father and sisters, he has two brothers, Staff Sgt. Dale, with the army in France and Richard, of this city.

Office supplies of any description may be obtained quickly through the Charlevoix Courier.—Adv. 23

MICHIGAN MIRROR

Just as coming events cast their shadows ahead, so the approach of V-Day in Europe is precipitating currents of adjustment on the Michigan home front.

The Michigan Office of Civilian Defense is headed toward partial or complete dishandoument. Auditor General Vernon J. Brown has announced opposition to renewal of appropriations, holding that the period of emergency is over when enemy raids could be made.

Organized labor has been in green pastares. Financed by public debt, war contractors have paid lash overtime wages. Cutbacks in production will hasten a return to normal hour rates, now frozen by the Little Steel formula. Hence an organized campaign, led by the C.I.O. which is all-out for President Roosevelt, to win a White House nod for raising of the wage ceiling — probably after the November elections.

The arrival of Governor Thomas E. Dewey at Lansing last Saturday — Sept. 9 — is indication that Michigan is considered by Republican leaders to be a doubtful state. The Detroit News polls show a strong preference in Detroit and Wayne county for President Roosevelt. If this ratio prevails on election day, Dewey would have to roll up a majority upstate of around 250,000 votes to overcome the Roosevelt lead in metropolitan Detroit. Cockiness of Republican leaders is not justified by this study.

Roosevelt's lead in industrial centers was broken down by one poll (Columbia university bureau of applied research) to indicate a high preference among women in the lower income group for re-

MICHIGAN OUT-OF-DOORS

Playground News of Field and Stream

There will be as many locally-raised ducks for Michigan hunters during the first days of the 1944 season as last year, with the possibility that there may be a slight increase, according to conservation department game men. Ducks nesting in the state brought off a normal hatch this year and survival of the broods has been good. The season opens September 20.

Two bucks and five does were released on North Manitou Island in 1925 and by 1930 deer were common in all sections of the Island.

Transfer of hatchery-reared trout to suitable lakes in late October and November will wind up the conservation department's 1944 planting program. No more trout will be planted in Michigan streams this year but more legal-size fish will be transferred to streams in advance of the 1945 season. Bass and bluegill plantings are being completed now.

Rainfall over most of the state held last week's forest fire loss to 25 acres. Eight fires in the period are reported by the conservation department. Totals were smallest since the third week in June when three fires burned one acre. A total of 14,324 acres has been burned in 1,154 fires this year.

Fifty-eight per cent of the archers who hunted deer in Michigan during the 1943 season had never hunted with guns, and 29 per cent had hunted deer for the first time with bow and arrow.

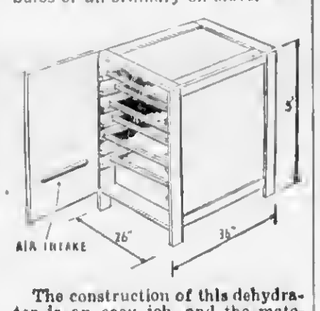
A Safe Dehydrator

HOME dehydration units for preserving food for winter have proved their value on many farms. Here are some suggestions for building a simple, safe dehydrator with few materials. According to the National Fire Protection Association and the National Safety Council, in order to be safe, dehydration equipment should be built of non-combustible materials. The unit illustrated below is built of fireproof asbestos cement board and can be heated either with light bulbs or an ordinary oil stove.



The construction of this dehydrator is an easy job, and the materials are readily available, since asbestos cement products are noncritical building materials.

The asbestos board is nailed to a light framework and the tray supports on the interior are held in place about 8½ inches apart by attaching them to the framework at each end. The trays are also made of asbestos board and are cut 24 inches square to permit turning them as needed during the drying operation. An opening similar to the one in the door should be made in the back at the top to provide an outlet for air circulation.

Politics Is Everyday Business of Woman Voter

Politics is your every day business—that is the way Mrs. Charles W. Weis, Jr., an assistant campaign director of women's activities in behalf of the Dewey-Bricker ticket, sums up the 1944 woman voter's responsibility.

Mrs. Weis practices what she preaches. Hard at work in the New York Republican Campaign Headquarters, Mrs. Weis makes every visitor, and every one of her thousands of correspondents the country over, sense her down-to-earth evaluation of politics "as every-day business."

She's New York State's National Committeewoman. She'll tell you most convincingly of Governor Dewey's notable qualifications for the presidency; likewise she will describe Governor Bricker's fitness for the vice presidency. But at the same time, she'll press upon you the urgency for being interested in politics, in knowing and talking about issues, about being a 100 percent voting citizen.

"American women have the greatest challenge in all history in this election," says Mrs. Weis, a reasonable mother of three, the eldest of whom is in the air corps overseas.

"We cannot afford to be passive or indifferent to passing events such as the threat of the Roosevelt "New Deal-CIO to paralyze America. Women must make politics every day business, and keep it healthy and sound."

Not in the Book

By MARY COLES

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

CORP. JIMMY KELLER walked briskly over to Sergeant Dikes. Now was the time to ask him, and even if the answer was no, well, you couldn't get ruled off for trying. Maybe all those hash marks on the sergeant's left sleeve didn't mean that he was as tough as most of the boys thought.

Jimmy was twenty-two, and a corporal of just three weeks. His blue denims bagged at the knees. Sergeant Dikes' uniform fitted him like the bark on the bluegum trees of the hillside where the artillery detachment was located. His face was rugged and bleak.

"I've been thinking, Sergeant, that the boys would be happier and do better work if we fixed up the camp a little."

"As how?" The older man's gray eyes roved over the scattered pup tents, the neat piles of barrack bags, and back to Jimmy. "Looks regulation. What's the matter with it?"

Jimmy gulped. Maybe it was dumb after all. The boys had said that the Sergeant would mow him down. But he would make the attempt anyway.

"What I mean is, the boys have about four free hours every day. If they want to read, they have to sit on the ground. We could make a table and a couple of benches; fix up a spot to pitch horseshoes."

When the sergeant spoke, the words came from one side of his mouth. "Corporal, when I was your age I had ideas too. Sometimes they worked, but mostly they didn't. And when they didn't, it was just too bad. So all I can say is this, Me, I go by the book. If it says

"That's all, Corporal."

so in the book, I do it. And if it doesn't say so in the book, I don't do it. You asked me, and I'm telling you. I won't say yes, and I won't say no. That's all, Corporal."

"What did the top say, Jimmy" May we?" About fifteen were crowded around the corporal.

"He didn't say yes, and he didn't say no," said Jimmy wryly. "He didn't even say maybe," he added with a grin. "But if you fellows will help I'll go ahead."

"If the old man doesn't like it he'll break you back to private," said Sam Johnson.

"Make it an order, Jimmy," brightly suggested somebody. "Then if the brass hats don't like it we'll be in the clear." Jimmy joined in the laugh that followed.

"Let's go," said Sam Johnson. "But remember, if there's a beef, you take it."

"I'll take it," said Jimmy. He looked at the chevrons on his sleeve. Six months to earn those two bits of cloth, and now he might lose them!

The material arrived the next day. The obliging landowner had driven his truck to the lumber yard and delivered it himself with eight large horseshoes, just the right size and weight to pitch. By sunset the rough table, two benches and four chairs were finished and placed. Stakes had been driven and two horseshoe courts marked out.

At four p. m. two days later, most of the boys were off duty until seven. Three sat at the table writing letters. Sam Johnson and others were on the courts. All the chairs were occupied. Jimmy had just repacked his bag when he heard a challenge from the sentry at the camp entrance. Then the colonel's big gray car rolled past the guard and stopped within ten feet of Jimmy.

The colonel walked toward the table. Sergeant Dikes followed at regulation distance, his face expressionless. After what seemed an hour to Jimmy the Colonel spoke. "Who is responsible for these, ah—shall we say improvements?"

Jimmy stepped forward one pace and saluted: "I am, sir."

The Colonel looked at the others. "Anyone else accountable?" No one answered. "Very well, Sergeant, take the corporal's name." He turned to Jimmy. "I like the right kind of enterprise in the men of my command. These conveniences meet with my approval. Corporal, you will be acting sergeant from now on." To Sergeant Dikes he said, "Make a note of that, Sergeant."

As Jimmy watched Dikes "make a note of it" he saw him close one eye. And what was intended for a smile played for a moment about Sergeant Dikes' lips.

Wire Straightener

SOME of the "scarce" items needed on farms are more plentiful now, but farmers still can't buy fencing, baling wire, and several other items just any day despite the increased production. The re-use of baling wire is still necessary in order to save metal needed for war production.

To save [illegible] bale wire the [illegible] been developed by the experts at Purdue

University. It consists of a small vise and a lever with a barn door hook screwed into it. These are mounted on opposite ends of a work bench or a 2x6 plank, 10 feet long. As shown in the illustration, the lever is hinged and is placed with the side holding the hook toward the vise.

In order to straighten a piece of wire, simply hook the loop of wire over the hook on the lever and fasten the straight end of the wire in the vise. A slight pull on the lever then will straighten the wire so it can be used again. To prevent waste, when bales of hay or straw are opened, the wire should be untied instead of being cut.

W. H. WALLACE

Back to Elm Street, U.S.A.

Back from the business of killing—to the business of living!

Back from scenes of hatred, despair and destruction to a homeland of peace, hope and opportunity!

Millions of young Americans are coming back to thousands of farms—to thousands of peaceful Elm Streets in every city, town and village of America!

They've made up their minds to a lot of things while they've been away.

They've seen the suffering of homeless terrorized families—people who have lost their self-respect, their hope, their health—everything.

They've seen a large part of the world in ruins, because a few fanatical men sold "gold bricks" to millions of people who traded in their freedom for promises of security—for brightly painted pictures of a "planned economy" under an all-wise, all-powerful government.

And they want no part of that sort of thing here in America.

They want jobs. They want to plan their own lives. Make their own futures. Go places under their own power.

And we must give them that opportunity.

But to do it, wartime restrictions and controls must be removed from agriculture, business—and the individual citizen—as quickly as possible.

Farmers must be free to plant what they want, and as much as they want—without needless bureaucratic supervision.

Taxes must be adjusted so that money will be available to finance the change-over to peacetime production.

Greater incentives must be provided, so that workers can make more money, by making more goods for more people.

Mr. Private Citizen must be allowed to make money—and be free to invest it in business ventures of his own—or of others.

Prosperity has always come to America through the growth of production—not its restriction—on farms and in factories.

Profitable production will make jobs for the boys who are coming back. But business, labor, agriculture and an understanding government must work together to create it—hold it—and increase it.

The post-war world will see a tremendous growth of small business in America. One of the major problems will be credit. Planless Planners

GLIMPSES

"Here it comes—there it goes" can be said of the machinery desperately needed by American farmers if they are to keep up the burden of feeding America, her allies, and the conquered nations.

The optimistic statement to the Senate that American farmers are "seeing" the farm machinery they need brought forth the information that most of the machinery "seen" by North Dakota farmers is going past them on the way to Canada, Russia, New Zealand, Australia, England and Africa.

One North Dakota farmer told of seeing six carloads of combines and three tractors passing his farm by rail in one week bound for Canada, while the entire northwest is being forced to curtail food production by lack of farm implements.

EGGS ON THE MARCH

This is the saga of 108,000 dozen eggs—and a New Deal bureau.

Back last May, the War Food Administration purchased the eggs in Minnesota, ostensibly for war purposes. The eggs were shipped to Cleveland, apparently to be sent into dry warehouse storage.

But the eggs were transferred to an egg-breaking establishment in Missouri. (No cracks, please). From there, the eggs (still not broken) were shipped to Omaha, and from thence back to St. Paul, from whence they had departed several months before.

They were sent from St. Paul to Chicago, where the Illinois Department of Agriculture caught up with them, decided something ought to be done about these eggs. They had become bad eggs, so the Illinois department official placed a seizure order against them. At last reports, the state officials were awaiting Washington approval to do away with these eggs.

It only cost $4,200 in freight charges to send the eggs on their cross-country joyride.

THE CRYSTAL BALL

"In order to preserve their independence the people must not let our rulers load them with perpetual debt. . .

"We must make our choice between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. . . . A departure from principle in one instance becomes a precedent for a second; that second for a third; and so on, till the bulk of the society is reduced to be mere automatons of misery. . . . The fore horse of this frightful team is public debt. Taxation follows that, and in its train wretchedness and oppression. . . ."

So wrote Thomas Jefferson in a letter to Samuel Kercheival in 1816.

OCD IS NEEDED UNTIL END OF WAR, GOVERNOR STATES

With the war in Europe believed to be rapidly nearing its climax, Governor Harry F. Kelly has outlined a policy for the continuation of Civilian Defense in Michigan until final victory is also won in the Pacific, but with streamlining of the state staff to the minimum necessary to carry on only essential operations.

"We have not reached the point where the entire program can be abolished," the Governor said. "Until victory, certainly we aren't going to abandon some phases, particularly at the local level.

"We will make economies that can be made at the State level, but we are not taking the position that we don't need the OCD. Every effort will be made to reduce personnel at the state office and every curtailment that can be made there will be made."

Certain activities, such as salvage and Victory Gardens, may be necessary not only for the duration of the war, but perhaps for some time thereafter, the Governor said. He also said that Civilian Defense fire and police units must be maintained.

"Another example is the investigation made last year in connection with the coal shortage," Governor Kelly stated. "Michigan was complimented on the way this task was handled. A similar situation can arise again.

"Michigan has done a marvelous job on civilian defense, both on the State and local levels. We certainly don't want the public to get the idea we are disbanding the program at either level. Local units particularly should stand by until the war is over."

Governor Kelly's statement followed a conference with Capt. Donald S. Leonard, State Civilian Defense Director, on how the State office could be made "more compact." Leonard is now preparing a report on recommended operations in view of the war situation.

Civilian Defense in Michigan was established in 1941, and at one time had 117 employes. For the last year a policy of retrenchment has been followed and the payroll today contains 54 names, including the staff of the State Civil Air Patrol, an Army auxiliary which is supported from the OCD budget, and the water supply protection service in the Detroit Metropolitan Area. Both the U. S. Citizens Defense Corps Protective Service and the Civilian War Service programs of OCD also have been revised to eliminate activities no longer regarded as essential, and further modification is planned as war conditions permit. The basic organization, however, will be maintained to meet any war problems and natural disaster emergencies on the home front.

Pilchard Catch

A considerable portion of the pilchard catch is reduced to oil and meal. The meal is used in the manufacture of poultry feed to provide the indispensable animal protein, and the oil, which is a source of vitamin D, is also used to fortify feed and has many industrial uses. Production of meal this year was 76,032 tons, compared with 71,828 tons in 1942-43, and oil production was 14,304,253 gallons, as against 12,508,958.

WEED PROBLEMS CAN BE SOLVED

Two major steps that will go a long way in the control of weeds are at the disposal of every farmer. One is the avoiding of the habit of planting weed seeds with the crops; the other the overcoming of the attitude of indifference towards weeds that are already on the farm.

The first problem can be solved easily by more universal use of a good fanning mill. Above all, the time to think about planting clean seed is during the preplanting period. The second problem, like all phases of weed control, depends more upon the man than the method.

The battle against weeds should be an incessant one on every farm. Unfortunately like fleas on dogs, weeds on farms are seldom molested until they become intolerable. Generally, there are several acres of bindweed on the farm before it is noticed. By that time the difficulties of eradication have been multiplied. Weeds can steal a portion of every crop, and there is little protest. If a human thief did as much, the owner would immediately be up in arms.

Clean out small areas before they become large ones, is a motto well worth adopting.

CAN FRUIT WITHOUT SUGAR IF NECESSARY

Don't put off canning Michigan's bountiful harvest of peaches and other late fruit because of possible shortage of sugar. Unsweetened peaches, pears, or apples will keep equally well as sweetened fruit, provided the same care in processing is exercised.

The amount of sugar normally present in canned fruit does not act as a preservative, but serves chiefly to help retain the shape, color and flavor of the fruit.

If there is not enough natural juice present to cover the fruit in the jars, crush some of the same kind of fruit in order to extract sufficient liquid. This will provide a canned product of better flavor than if water alone is used to cover the fruit.

New Sidings Over Old

IF YOU are worried about the deterioration of the siding on your home or service buildings—if the boards have loosened in the wind and the paint is peeled and blistered—here's a tip that certainly will interest you.

There are no restrictions on the use of non-critical asbestos cement shingles and sidings for making these repairs. If any part of the siding on a building is in need of repair or painting, the entire building may be completely aided with fireproof asbestos products without special application.

The government not only approves but urges farmers to make necessary repairs with non-critical supplies. And you are really helping the war effort when you take a "stitch in time" and thus possibly prevent the necessity for more extensive repairs.

RESTAURANTS TO EMPHASIZE CAN COLLECTION

Cooperation of Michigan's restaurants in the tin can salvage drive has been assured the State Salvage Committee of the Michigan Office of Civilian Defense, according to Kenneth M. Burns, chairman. The 100,000 members of the National Restaurant Association, comprising 85 per cent of the nation's restaurants, are acting to increase tin salvage, Burns said.

Though restaurants have been cooperating in the drive, full participation of the association has been pledged in response to an appeal by the War Production Board.

The critical shortage of tin was emphasized in a message to Burns from Louis S. Loeb, Chief of the Tinned Scrap section of the WPB General Salvage Branch, Washington, who warned that actual collections have rarely passed 50 per cent of the monthly quota of 40,000 tons. Even the end of the war in Europe will not eliminate present shortages, he stated.

LARGER 4-H SHOW DESPITE DROUGHT

Michigan 4-H club boys and girls haven't permitted the summer drought to hamper their food production projects. That fact was definitely demonstrated at the annual 4-H club show at Michigan State college September 5 to 8, where vegetable and farm crop displays were on a quality standard not below that of previous normal rainfall years.

This year's show surpassed all others in size in virtually all departments. Additional tents were necessary to house the huge influx of livestock, estimated to value at least $150,000. Approximately 3,000 members were present from nearly every county in the state to participate in contest and place exhibits.

The huge livestock show and the plentiful exhibits of vegetables, grain crops, sewing, cooking, preserving, and handicraft were proof enough that the majority of Michigan 4-H members are living up to the slogan "Feed a Fighter in '44."

This year's beef cattle department was nearly twice as large as last year, and despite the unfavorable feed ratio the swine entries were somewhat larger than in 1943. A substantial increase in dairy cattle also was noted.

A new feature this year was the display arranged by the Military Department of Michigan State college. Much of the equipment used for training and in battle was on exhibit.

T-B ASSOCIATION REPORTS FINDINGS

The Michigan Tuberculosis Association reports the following findings in the x-ray clinic held in July for Beaver Island.

The summary of the clinic shows that six persons under 20 years have primary type tuberculosis. There was one out-patient re-examination and one for whom a re-ray was recommended. Thirty persons have been x-rayed in Beaver Island. Twelve were x-rayed for the first time and 18 have been x-rayed previously. The findings have been sent to the family physician of each person x-rayed. The people x-rayed have been notified of the findings by the County Health Unit.

The use of tuberculin test of the apparently healthy, and an x-ray of the positive reactors, is the best known method of determining early tuberculosis.

The Michigan Tuberculosis Association has long been sponsoring an early diagnosis campaign, as the disease is more easily curable if found early.

the handling and any storage it must undergo, it is absolutely necessary that all articles be packed in boxes of metal, wood, solid fiberboard, or strong double-faced corrugated fiberboard and tied with strong twine. It is highly desirable that all fiberboard boxes be securely wrapped in heavy paper, if available, as experience has shown that boxes with an outer wrapper often become crushed or split, thus allowing the contents to escape.

"Contents should be packed tightly, in order that the articles may not become loosened in transit, damaging the contents or the covering of the parcels. Hard candies, nuts, caramels (including those covered with chocolate), fruit cake, and chocolate bars individually wrapped in waxed paper should be enclosed in inner boxes of wood, metal, or cardboard. Soft candies, whether homemade or commercial, do not carry well and should not be mailed. Sharp-pointed or sharp-edged instruments, such as razors and knives, must have their points or edges protected so they cannot cut through their coverings and damage other mail.

"Addresses must be legible, in typewriting or ink. Copies of sales slips of retail stores should not be used as address labels. A slip containing the complete address of addressee and sender should be enclosed in the parcel to permit identification in the event the outer wrapper becomes torn, mutilated, or destroyed in transit.

"Parcels addressed to overseas Army personnel should show the grade or rank, full name, Army serial number, service organization and unit, and the APO number in care of the postmaster at the port of embarkation through which the mail is routed. Postage must be fully prepaid."

MICHIGAN HEALTH NEWS

More than 200,000 bulletins and school health record forms were distributed by the Michigan Department of Health during August. Much of this material is for use of teachers and was mailed directly to schools or to local health officers who in turn will distribute it to teachers in their districts.

Subjects of these health pamphlets vary from infant care to disease prevention, from mental planning to protecting public water supplies. Especially popular with teachers are the record forms for the cumulative health record of pupils, on which the child's condition and progress may be recorded each school year.

Chinese soldiers who captured Tapa, one of the Jap strong points near Lungling on the Burma road, look over a mass of weapons and supplies abandoned by the Japs as they fled to the hills before the advancing Chinese in Salween river campaign. Chinese soldiers have put these arms to good use.

A total of 53,529 babies were born in Michigan in the first six months of this year according to the records of the Michigan Department of Health. This was a decrease of 13 per cent from the all-time high of 1943 when 61,596 babies were born in the first six months.

The total number of deaths in the state declined three per cent for the first six months with 28,110 deaths reported against 29,050 for the same period last year.

'PAPER TROOPERS' IN SCHOOL TO AID SALVAGE CAMPAIGN

With the opening of schools, Michigan children will be banded together as "Paper Troopers" in a state-wide waste paper campaign under the sponsorship of local salvage committees, the State Salvage Committee of the Michigan Office of Civilian Defense announces.

Materials have been ordered by cooperating school officials to cover more than 3,000 schools and teachers. It is expected that nearly 85 per cent of the school children in Michigan will participate in the program during the year.

A distinctive "P.T." armband, designating the pupil as a "Paper Trooper", will be given to all participants. Advancement in rank for attaining waste paper collection quotas or for winning school room, school or district contests will be denoted by the award of chevrons. Certificates of merit are to be issued schools and individual pupils for outstanding records.

Householders are to be asked to sign pledge cards to save paper and have it ready for collection. A record sheet and a set of instructions on how to prepare paper will be left at each home.

FIRST RELIEF SUPPLIES ARRIVE IN WARSAW

Receipt of American relief supplies in Warsaw for Polish war victims was confirmed recently by Polish War Relief, a member agency of the National War Fund. The first shipment consisted of vitamin pills and condensed milk.

Polish War Relief officials claim this shipment is the first confirmed to be sent into the partially liberated area of Poland and that additional stocks of relief materials already stored in London will be released as fast as transportation facilities can be made available.

Gas Conservation

Much gasoline can be saved by avoiding racing the engine and choking it excessively during the warm-up period, and by starting and stopping the car smoothly. Quick acceleration is wasteful whether in starting or driving along. Other gas-conserving measures include keeping speed moderate, shutting off the engine when stopping for a few minutes, keeping tire pressure up to par and the carburetor in proper order, having valves ground, carbon removed, and worn piston rings replaced.

Fixing Up the Farm
by BURTON WILLIAMS

Save Critical Lumber

NEW rules by which the farmer may obtain lumber for necessary building and repair are now in effect. They are part of lumber control plan L-335, which went into operation August 1 and put the nation's entire lumber output on a strictly controlled allotment basis.

Certificates for the purchase of needed lumber will be issued by county AAA committees. Each state and county is allocated a definite quarterly quota.

Because of the critical shortage of lumber which has made this control necessary, county committees have been instructed to urge farmers to obtain lumber from their own or neighbors' wood lots whenever possible.

The committees also are insisting that other less critical materials be used wherever possible. These include such products as asbestos cement board, asbestos shingles and sidings, tile, brick, concrete, insulating board and others.

Farmers need have no hesitancy about using these time-tested materials. Many have advantages particularly suited for farm purposes. Asbestos products, for example, are fireproof and weatherproof. They save money and time because they require practically no maintenance.

Western Aspect

Odessa, Russia, was built by order of Catherine the Great, about the time Washington, D. C., was founded. Like Washington, it was constructed largely on reclaimed swampland and wilderness after plans made by a Frenchman. The first leaders of the new municipality were either western Europeans or were English-educated and gave to Odessa an occidental aspect unknown to other Russian cities.

PEACH HARVEST AT PEAK, HOME CANNERS TOLD

Housewives who plan to can peaches to meet family requirements are advised that the Michigan crop is expected to reach the market in greatest volume and at lowest prices this week and next.

"Harvest of the Elberta, delayed a few days by recent rains, is being pushed this week, with fruit of fair size and excellent quality being offered at reasonable prices," said C. Wall, vice-president of A & P Food Stores, one of the nation's leading buyers of fresh fruit. "Demands of war agencies for canned peaches are such that only through home canning can a housewife be assured of a sufficient supply for her family."

Agricultural experts have estimated the Michigan crop at about 2,000,000 bushels, with estimates being revised upward because of recent rainfall.

"Prospects for one of the largest crops on record were cut sharply by dry weather during the summer," said Dr. T. A. Merrill, research associate at Michigan State College. "Late rain is swelling the fruit to fair size, however, and total volume may approach last year's 2,450,000 bushels."

Although the size of the fruit is smaller than normal, the sugar content is unusually high. Which should contribute to the quality of the home-canned product.

The harvest peak is expected to continue through September 16, with fair supplies reaching the market the following week.

"DAIRY BARN GUTTER CLEANER"

Fifteen years ago Martin H. Geerlings, Route 3, Holland, Mich. decided that the old laborious method of hand-cleaning the dairy barn could be improved upon. So he put his head to work and devised Michigan's first dairy barn gutter cleaner.

That machine worked so successfully that it is still in use on the Geerlings farm and has proved to be the worthy ancestor of many other cleaners that are now saving hours of back-breaking labor—labor that cannot be obtained—on Michigan dairy farms.

Most any farmer can duplicate the Geerlings gutter cleaner by the use of scrap materials found about the farm, or his neighbor's farms. Total cost of the home-made contrivance was only about $75. Upkeep consists of replacing the gutter chain about every seven years at a cost of about $15.

The conveyor itself is made of ⅝ inch log chain with fence post slats 24 inches apart. Geerlings used an old mower as the reduction unit, driving from a gasoline engine to the pittman balance wheel, with the apron drum fastened to one end of the mower axle.

Use of dairy barn gutter cleaners is being encouraged by Michigan State College engineering extension specialists, who point out that they not only save labor but improve sanitation and encourage daily hauling of manure to the fields, thus maintaining and improving the soil.

DDT INSECTICIDE IS NOT AVAILABLE

No supplies of DDT, the much publicized new insecticide, are available for civilian use.

Despite some of the glowing accounts of panacea-like qualities of DDT, the compound is not a universal remedy for all insect problems plaguing farmers, gardeners, and home makers. It is simply a valuable addition to the list of insecticides.

So far, tests have shown DDT to be useful in controlling various types of common flies, yellow jackets, cabbage worms, oriental fruit moths, and leafhoppers. Even though the material kills flies and mosquitoes readily, unfortunately such useful insects as bees are also killed.

Chief advantages of DDT, as revealed by preliminary tests, are that it is non-toxic to plants and can be readily mixed for use in spraying.

Entomologists at Michigan State college are now conducting experiments with DDT to determine its possibilities in controlling such pests as roaches, rose chafers and ants. No results are yet available. Before widespread use of the compound can be recommended, the possibility of its causing harm to man and animals must also be thoroughly investigated.

RECORD OF THE COUNCIL

SEPTEMBER 11, 1944

The Common Council of the City of Charlevoix met in Special Session on the above date with Mayor Bridge presiding.

Aldermen present: Bellinger, Erber, Goss, Hooker, Nettleton and Ochs.

Alderman Erber offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, supported by Alderman Goss.

BE IT RESOLVED by the Common Council of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, that whereas the death of Bernard J. Foster, while in the performance of his duty with the armed forces of the United States of America, has taken from this City, one of its finest young men, who, the citizens of Charlevoix knew, would render whole-hearted, honest and honorable service to his country in its fight for the freedom of the people of the world, and which service has been cut short while he was yet in prime of life, bringing home to the citizens of Charlevoix in one sharp blow the seriousness of the conflict being waged;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Common Council, on behalf of the citizens of Charlevoix, express to the bereaved family our honest and sincere sorrow and sense of deep loss in the death of their husband, father, son and brother; and that we further convey our heartfelt sympathy and consolation to them in their hour of darkness.

RESOLVED FURTHER that a transcript of this Resolution be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

Adopted by unanimous vote of the Council on this 11th day of September, A. D. 1944.

On motion the Council adjourned.

Fixing the Farm by BURTON WILLIAMS

Hog Barriers

THERE'S an old saying that "a hog doesn't know much about Sunday." He evidently doesn't know much about the wartime restrictions on travelling either. Sunday, Monday, or any day, he's on the lookout for a chance to roam.

To keep your hogs in their own pastura, and yet allow horses and cattle to run in and out, try this barrier. Nail a few henvy boards securely to the fence posts which are on each side of the opening to a height of about eighteen inches. Then set two short posts inside the hog pasture about eighteen inches from this barrier, and nail boards to these to form a second barrier.

The size of your hogs may make it necessary to build the barrier a little higher, so it's a good idea to set posts long enough to hold an additional strip. However, the eighteen inch height usually is sufficient.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Germans Shorten Lines on East, West Fronts for Suicide Stand; Coal Production Tops 1943 Rate

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.]

Marring liberation of Paris was internal strife, which broke out at famed Notre Dame cathedral, with Axis snipers firing on Parisian crowd, shown seeking refuge behind French tanks.

EUROPE:
Head for Reich

Giving in before the overwhelming weight of the advancing Allied armies, Nazi troops in the Paris region fell back toward the German frontier, while remnants of enemy units in southern France trickled northward to join in the evacuation of the country.

Although the Germans claimed to have withdrawn the bulk of their Seventh army eastward, the Allies exacted a heavy toll from it, with U. S. and British armored columns hacking up rearguards and fleets of bombers ripping up enemy troops making a hasty scramble for the reich border.

As the U. S. columns swept on, such historic World War I battle-fields as Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood and Soisson fell to rampaging Doughboys after little resistance, in marked contrast to the bitter, bloody fighting which was required 25 years ago before the Allies could plant their flags over the ground.

In southern France, the Allies advanced almost at will, encountering fanatical resistance only at certain strong-points, and indicating that the Germans had pulled out the bulk of their forces from this section of the country before Lieut. Gen. Alexander Patch's Seventh army landed between Toulon and Cannes. Even so, the bag of enemy prisoners totaled well over 45,000, although many of these troops were foreigners the Nazis had impressed into service.

Enter Hungary

Even as the Nazis streamed back to their own borders in the west, their armies were sorely pressed in the east, where German divisions trapped in Rumania tried to fight themselves free, and other of their troops moved up to the Carpathian mountains to attempt to stave off the Russian advance into Hungary.

In moving into the Carpathians, the Germans fulfilled an agreement with the Hungarians to provide troops for that country's defense as the price for keeping it in the war, following Rumania's capitulation to the Allies and Bulgaria's peace bid.

For herself, Hungary sought to solidify her internal government by establishing a new cabinet, composed for the most part of military strongmen, headed by Col. Gen. Vitez Gezn Lakoi.

As Germany tried to hold Hungary in line Russian troops were reported well inside the Carpathians, with the enemy energetically attempting to contain the Red drive in the rocky masses.

Nazi Predicament

With the full weight of Allied might falling down on Germany, the Nazi predicament became severely acute, with the enemy himself seemingly pulling in his troops in both the west and east for a final suicidal stand on shortened lines, hoping for a possible compromise peace.

Addressing the German people over the radio, Lieut. Gen. Kurt Dittmar, the army's press spokesman, sounded the keynote to Nazi hopes, declaring that they would be willing to cease fighting if the Allies relaxed their war aims.

Said he "If this determination (to destroy Germany) did not exist, if the world we face had been ready . . . to recognize the living rights of a great hard working nation, no reason could have been seen why this misery had to fill the world . . . and will continue to fill it."

COAL:
Good Supplies

With coal output averaging 12,000,000 tons weekly, the industry looked forward confidently to the achievement of the production goal of 625,000,000 tons for 1944.

Mining of the 625,000,000 tons would assure the nation of a comfortable fuel supply, but due to wartime complications, many regions unable to obtain certain types of coal and may be forced to rely upon neighboring sources.

Up to the middle of August, U. S. miners had turned out 401,000,000 tons of coal, for a gain of 29,000,000 tons over a year ago. With rosy prospects prevailing, the government recently assured dealers that there would be no further reduction of quotas for retail deliveries.

PRODUCTION:
New Labor Demands

No less than 400,000 workers are needed to meet the services' revised production demands based upon battle experiences in France and Italy, with the shipbuilding and artillery and ammunition industries alone calling for 176,000 employees.

To meet the new labor demands, the War Manpower commission planned to transfer workers from other jobs, even though they may be drawn from activities hitherto considered essential.

Besides the shipbuilding and artillery and ammunition fields, 57,000 workers are required in the lumber industry; 45,200 in food processing through September; 22,000 in electronics; 16,000 in tire-making; 10,200 in truck and tank foundries and forges, and 4,600 monthly in cotton duck production.

PACIFIC:
MacArthur's Strategy

With Gen. Douglas MacArthur's ambition to return to the Philippines closer to realization, military experts at South Pacific headquarters declared that pursuit of his favorite tactics could lead to conquest of the islands with a minimum cost of lives.

General MacArthur

In recalling General MacArthur's strategy in isolating the enemy on New Guinea, experts pointed out that his tactics consisted chiefly of luring the enemy out of position, then striking his weakest points, and using the jungle as a shield for maneuvers.

Continuing efforts to soften up the enemy's defensive system in the Philippines area, U. S. army and navy bombers hammered at enemy shipping and installations.

MEAT:
Light Marketings

With hog receipts at low levels, and with packers ordered to set aside one-third of production for the government, pork supplies promise to remain tight until late in October, when the usual heavy seasonal run is expected to ease the situation.

Although the short hog supply is expected to be offset by increased shipments of cattle, movement of the latter to market has been slower than anticipated, with the result that the plainer grades have commanded strong prices.

As a result of the tight supply, hogs have been netting ceiling prices, with the market expected to remain firmer than last year when the heavy runs get under way.

COTTON:
Future Scanned

With cotton accounting for one-fifth of the nation's cash farm income, and with southern cotton states embracing more than one-third of the country's population, attention has been focused on the future of the commodity once the record breaking demands of the war end.

Even as Sen. John H. Bankhead (Ala.) fights now for wartime parity for cotton, apprehension has been voiced over the possibility of a big postwar slump in prices, not only of feeding the producers themselves but northern industry and labor as well.

In studying the postwar cotton situation, the Guaranty Trust Company of New York opined that partial solution of the problem may lie in price concessions, increased production, tariff adjustments, reliance on foreign credits and the extension of subsidies.

Industrial research and intensive trade promotion also might contribute to strengthening cotton's market position, it was said.

SMOKES:
Brighter Prospects

With increased tobacco supplies in view and no early end to the war relieving the manpower situation, the outlook for increased cigarette production brightened.

Prospects for a 950,000,000-pound flue-cured tobacco crop for 1944-'45 promised to allow manufacturers to set aside larger stocks for aging and release more matured supplies. With cutbacks in military production resulting in labor layoffs, many former cigarette plant workers are expected to return to their old jobs, easing the tight manpower situation in these establishments.

The cigarette shortage, which has placed smokers on a day-to-day basis for many weeks, should reach its peak in September, the trade reported.

Dig Out of Hail

Hail drifts five feet high in some places, with some stones as large as golf balls, marked the severe hailstorm which struck Colorado, causing 1½ million dollars damage to cities and farms. In Pueblo, merchants are shown digging out of drifts before stores.

PUBLIC HEALTH:
Fitness Sought

With selective service's rejection of 4,000,000 men revealing the low health level of the population, effort will be made to improve the situation through a nation-wide physical fitness program, which will be launched this fall in schools and colleges and later extended to industry and the general public.

Under leadership of the Joint Committee on Physical Fitness, no less than 364 national organizations are taking part in the program, with goals including protection against preventable defects, correction of existing deficiencies, knowledge of how to live healthfully, and provision of adequate means for physical development.

In commenting on the program, Col. Leonard G. Rowntree, chief of selective service's medical division and chairman of the Joint Committee on Physical Fitness, declared: "We need to develop people with stamina, energy, skill and agility, so they may have a fuller enjoyment of life."

CIO:
Probe Political Action

Called before the house campaign expenditures committee, CIO Chieftain Sidney Hillman revealed that the organization's political action committee spent $428,397 up to August 15, with $67,320 of the sum used in primaries and state elections.

Vigorously denying that workers were forced to kick in to the political action committee, Hillman said that the bulk of total collections of $806,715 constituted union contributions, with loans figuring prominently in the remainder of the funds. An additional $1,500,000 is being sought from workers, Hillman reported.

DRIED VEGETABLES

About 95 per cent of the dehydrated vegetable output will go to the army, navy, Red Cross and other "non-civilian" agencies, the War Food administration announces. Based on an estimated allocable supply of 277,900,000 pounds of dried vegetable products, this means that 263,000,000 pounds will be sent to the military and induced war service agencies, and that about 12,000,000 pounds will go to civilians.

Production is expected to be about 67 per cent higher than 1943.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

FOOD MANUFACTURERS: Profits of food manufacturing companies declined in the first half of the year, the Grocery Manufacturers of America reported. A dip of 4.5 per cent was the average for the industry, the comparison being with the preceding six months. Higher costs of raw material, labor and other expenses, principally higher taxes, more than offset gains.

STEAKS: After September 4, butchers will be allowed to cube or tenderize top and bottom cuts of utility grade beef steak before putting it on sale. Heretofore this could be done only by request of and in the presence of the customer. The OPA has relaxed its ruling to make utility beef which is so plentiful supply, "more acceptable to the customer."

Illinois Man Speeds Up His Haymaking

Tractor-Drawn 'Sled' Used to Pick Up Bales

A clever method of saving labor in haying has been worked out by J. M. Houser Jr., near Farmer City in DeWitt county, Ill. On his 500-acre farm Mr. Houser has a herd of 60 Hereford cows and he has fed out as many as 175 feeder cattle and 1,000 western lambs in one year. To provide enough hay for this livestock, he fills two barns, each holding about 80 tons in bales.

Mr. Houser hires a pickup baler. The bales are dropped in the field as they come from the baler. To pick up the bales and haul them to the barn Mr. Houser built a sled which is pulled by a tractor. The sled is 20 feet long and 4 feet wide, and made from two logs and old lumber; it carries 33 bales, when loaded three bales high.

In picking up bales two men work on the sled with hooks; the tractor does not stop but moves continuously at about 2½ miles per hour. When they come alongside a bale one of the men on the sled hooks it and pulls one end onto the sled. The forward motion pushes the bale onto the sled, where both men pile it in position. The Houser's find it much easier to load this way than if the sled is stopped. They wait until the baler has made two rounds and pull the sled between two rows of bales, driving back and forth to load from either side. With the method used the three regular men on the farm can put up the hay as fast as it is baled and Mr. Houser feels that the additional charge made if a loading device were pulled directly behind the baler would not be justified.

At the center of one barn there is an elevator running up over the roof like an outside corn elevator. It consists of a wooden chute a little wider than a bale and a single chain from a corn elevator, with four steel cleats. Power for running this continuous chain is provided by an electric motor. The end of the elevator is close to the ground so that when the bales are pulled up to it on the sled they can be tipped onto the chain without lifting. Instead of the chain Mr. Houser originally used an old thresher belt with wooden cleats.

Make those mower repairs now, before haying starts.

Larger Hybrid Acreage To Swell Corn Output

Increased plantings to hybrid varieties accounted for a large percentage of the 2,721,000-acre rise in the farm area devoted to corn in 10 Midwestern states this spring, according to a statement made public by the Middle West Soil Improvement committee, based on an analysis of U. S. department of agriculture figures.

"This increasing trend to hybrids will swell the Corn Belt's 1944 output," the statement points out. "While hybrids outyield open-pollinated varieties by 20 to 25 bushels per acre, they likewise make a bigger draft on the soil's plant food resources. Thus they create the need for better crop management methods, including the use of fertilizers not only to help produce bigger yields, but to replace to some extent at least, the soil wealth removed by the crop."

More Citrus Fruit

Total citrus fruit production for 1943-44 is expected to be about 6 per cent above 1942-43 and about 52 per cent above the average annual production in 1935-39, the U. S. department of agriculture reports. The larger orange crop is credited with the expected increase.

Magic Words

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

THE Coast Guard officer shook his head. "The British are careful whom they hire."

Mark swung the launch to avoid the big ferryboat. "I get to know the crews better than the officials."

"Maybe I need training as a ship chandler," the officer grinned. "You're sure this cook is a spy?"

"No sir. I only told the commandant I was suspicious."

"And you also said the mate knows it."

"Can't prove it, but those accidents came too fast."

The officer said: "Once a week some housewife in Norfolk reports a spy. We're used to it."

Mark's nostrils flared. "So I'm crazy! But being gassed is no joke. When I jumped off that chain I went looking for the cook—all the way down to the hold. When I opened the bulkhead door I smelled gas. You know—they get rid of the rats that way. All of a sudden the door started to slam, and I had to hit it with my shoulder quick—or be locked in."

"That would have been curtains for you."

"Right—and my lad was on the other side of that door."

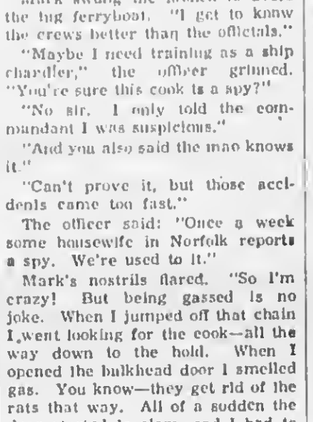
"What did he say?"

"Got kinda red and stammered something about the door should be closed."

"Listen, son, you haven't much to go on. I'm doing this because I'm on assignment. Has he filled his order yet?"

"The captain has to O.K. it. I'm to pick it up today."

"All right. While you talk to him I'll ask the captain to help me search his cabin—and I hope you're right."



"You can see those flags from here."

The stocky, kindly captain shook his head. "Nothing there, boy," he said.

Mark's eyes were pleading. "But I know there's something wrong. Did you look well?"

"So well we didn't pass up so much as a tobacco crumb."

Earnestly Mark said: "Captain, do you know the skipper of that British tanker yonder?"

"Indeed. He served under me as first mate."

"Please, sir, we've got to make this man give himself away. A friend of mine in that crew has been all over the world. He'll be able to wigwag a message. If I'm wrong the signal won't mean anything."

"Mystery, eh? Come along then, we'll have a try."

When they returned to the freighter, Mark turned anxiously to the captain. "Is your mate still checking that list of provisions with the cook?"

"I fancy he's finished now."

"Good, that means he hasn't seen the Coast Guard officer. Will you please keep out of sight, sir?" He swung on his heel and hurried to the mate's cabin and met the cook at the door. He tried to appear casual, though the words began to trip over his tongue. "Oh, hello—say, while I was waiting, I saw somebody on that tanker-wigwagging."

The cook sneered. "Kid games, eh?" He stalked up to the deck—then he froze. "Who is that man in uniform?"

Mark dropped his voice. "That's a Coast Guard officer. Said he had to see the captain right away."

The suspect slipped behind a ventilator. "Know what he wants?"

As if he hadn't heard, Mark said: "You can see those flags from here. Can you tell what they say?"

The man's black brows came together as he looked. Mark watched his body stiffen and his eyes shrink to pin points. He whirled to run and Mark sensed his purpose. He yelled breathlessly: "Captain—quick, grab him." But the wary skipper and two crewmen had him before he reached the companionway. Mark ran up excitedly. "Captain—his shoe. The sole's loose."

It took only a second to extract the telltale identification card. As they dragged the culprit away the Coast Guard officer turned to Mark. "Son, how did you trap him?"

Mark grinned expansively. "Just had my friend say, 'Officer coming to arrest you. Destroy your papers.'"

"But surely he didn't fall for that—anybody could read it."

The captain's eyes twinkled. "Not the way this lad did it. Seems his friend is something of a linguist. He said it in German."

"MR. AND MRS. SAMUEL BARTON KITTRIDGE announce the engagement of their daughter Sarah Chilton Kittridge to Craig Harrison III of West Branch Road. The wedding date has been set for—"

Kit's hands crashed on the typewriter keys. Never in the three years since she had taken over the society desk of the Clarion Courier had a story been more difficult. Sarah Chilton Kittridge and Craig Harrison III! Clarion's glamour boy number one, the papers called him. A series of eastern schools, travel, vice president of the Harrison factories. The desire of every mother with an eligible daughter, the hope of each of those daughters. Yet Craig was well-liked. Easy-going, good-natured, a bit on the spectacular side.

Kit ripped the paper from the machine, viciously squeezing it into a hard ball. She aimed at the basket and hit Barry Bradley as he came through the door. "Ye gods, Kit, won't you ever learn to throw straight? See, you hold a ball this way." His fingers gripped an imaginary missile.

"The pride and joy of the sports department plays he's another Bobby Feller, does he? If a girl could throw straight she might be anything else, but with you she'd be O.K."

"Do I detect a trace of sarcasm from our Kit? It doesn't become you, darling. What's cooking with society today?"

"Nothing. Go 'way, will you? I've a deadline in an hour and no lead."

"You can always dig up the Harrisons, you know. They're good for a line or a column any day. Always reliable Harrisons, I calls 'em."

"That's just what I was doing when you came in."

"Um, and what has Mamma Harrison joined this time, or is it our white-haired boy who is in the news again? Well, you keep him on your page, sister. My pups are particular about the company they keep."

"I'm announcing Craig's engagement."

"No foolin'! So somebody hit the jackpot. Who?"

Kit hesitated a moment and her voice was low. "Sarah Chilton Kittridge."

Barry stared at her. His voice, usually so strong, was uncertain. "You're kiddin'."

"Am I? Look at the paper in your hand."

Barry unfolded the crumpled sheet. "Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Barton Kittridge announce the engagement of their daughter, Sarah—" he read aloud, easing himself to the corner of Kit's desk. The pain in his eyes made Kit wince. "So Sarah Kittridge is marrying our glamour boy! I suppose I should offer congratulations. I thought I knew the Kittridge gal pretty well. Seems I'm wrong. What a laugh! It doesn't make sense! Sarah Kittridge and Craig Harrison. What's she really like, Kit? You ought to know."

The girl raised her dark eyes to look deep into Barry's stormy gray ones. Her voice was weary. "I don't know, Barry. She's twenty-four, has had a good education, traveled a bit. Rides well, plays rotten golf, dances divinely I've been told. Not much to look at."

"I thought her very pretty."

"Did you? Well, if you care for that type."

"I do. Very much."

"Oh!"

"And this guy, Harrison," Barry probed, "what about him, Kit, is he a stuffed shirt?"

"Not at all. He's all right when you know him. Too much money, perhaps, but he's worked hard for honors at school, tennis titles . . ."

"Well, he can give a girl whatever she wants."

"Maybe."

"What d'ya mean, maybe? Position, houses, furs, jewels, cars. What more could a girl ask?"

"What more is there?" Kit walked over to the dirty window looking out on a brick wall.

"I suppose so. Sarah Kittridge has never missed much. Perhaps she's old-fashioned enough to think she owes her family a good marriage. Perhaps she wants to have a home and children. Perhaps she—" Kit's head dropped. Her small hands covered her face. The slim shoulders shook with sobs.

Barry was on his feet in an instant. He swung her around to face him. "Kit, don't cry. Look at me, darling." Slowly he tilted her head back until their eyes met. "You crazy little fool. You darling idiot. And I'm the world's prize dope." His lips met hers in a kiss. Sometime later Barry held her away from him. "Say, gal, you've a deadline to meet. Come on, let's write the story and get out."

"But I haven't a lead," wailed Kit.

"Oh, haven't you? I'll draft it for you. You type it. Ready?"

"Yes." Kit's voice quavered.

"Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Barton Kittridge announce the engagement of their lovely daughter Sarah to Barrison Bradley. The wedding date has been set for—"

"For when, Barry?"

"Just write 'darned soon,' darling."

Potato Harvest To Start Soon Recent Rains Will Greatly Increase Yield

Good quality potatoes are certain to receive a premium on this year's market, so every precaution should be taken in harvesting and storing. Briefly, several important points in harvesting potatoes are: First, the potato digger should be driven slowly which avoids the bouncing of potatoes on the elevator. Dig deep enough to prevent the cutting of tubers. This puts more soil on the elevators which also prevents bruising.

Care in picking up potatoes is always worth the extra time involved. It is best to use the half-bushel size baskets and avoid tossing into the crates. Early digging of potatoes is recommended where the tubers are of sufficient size. This prevents frost damage. Allow the potatoes to dry out before being picked up — and in clear, warm days this only takes a short time. Keep the vines green by constant spraying. This will prevent late blight and will add to your production. Thus far late blight has not been observed in the county, so keep your fingers crossed. The recent rains have greatly increased our prospects for a good yield. However, in the majority of cases, two or three weeks of good growing weather is necessary before the potatoes will reach maturity.

Poultry Culling Demonstrations Scheduled for Sept. 29 and 30

Poultrymen should be highly interested in culling out their poor layers. Certainly with the high price of feed and increased costs of management, it will be a distinct saving to eliminate the unprofitable producers. An opportunity is offered poultrymen to receive help in learning the art of culling on Friday and Saturday, September 29 and 30.

J. M. Moore, Extension Poultryman of Michigan State College, will spend these two days working with a group of 4-H Club and Smith-Hughes boys. On each day, we will find it possible to cull some five or six flocks. At the end of the day, these boys will be sufficiently trained so that they can cull poultry for other farmers throughout the area. At this time, we will be pleased to have your request for this service if interested. It is entirely free and will save you many dollars in feed bills. Kindly drop a card to your extension agent if you would like to have your flock culled under the direction of the specialist. Each bird will be handled in the flock and from this experience you will be in a position to cull your own flock in the future. First come, first served, so let us know at once.

Feed Trough for Hogs

I DON'T know about your hogs, but mine have very poor feed or trough manners. A hog is not trained to make a hog of himself, and of course, nobody complains much about it, especially if they make a lot of weight.

However, it's a good idea to see that they all get their share when they line up at the feed troughs.

To minimize crowding and keep the hogs out of the feed trough, nail slats on the trough as shown in the illustration. Place them about one foot apart, and have the slats long enough to project at least twelve inches beyond the sides of the trough. This will form stalls to keep them from crowding. The slats, of course, should be fairly sturdy.

A white pelican has fished daily since late August from the roof of a partly submerged boat house at Rose Lake near Lansing. The big bird, with a wingspread of more than six feet, is far east of its usual haunts in the Mississippi valley. Other reports of white pelicans have been received from Michigan residents this summer, according to the conservation department. A number of the birds visited Isle Royale several weeks ago. They nest in western provinces of Canada.

Fifteen downstate game areas administered by the conservation department will be ready for hunters with the opening of the pheasant season October 15. Large signs identifying the game areas will be in place and direction signs along highways will guide hunters. Boundaries of the areas will be posted so that hunters will not trespass on adjoining privately-held lands. The game areas now embrace approximately 55,000 acres.

Average ground water levels fell six-tenths of a foot during August in the northern part of the lower peninsula, a record decline for the period and about 50 per cent more than normal. However, August levels were above the 10-year average for the month, having been exceeded in 1942 and 1943 only. They were one and three-tenths lower than a year ago, and nine-tenths of a foot higher than the record August low stage of 1936.

The average trend of ground water levels is a slight lowering until September, when fall rains usually provide slight recharge of the underground reservoir.

Inland lake levels fell two-tenths to one-half foot during the month, according to the geological survey division of the conservation department. The average decline was about three-tenths of a foot.

Renewed interest of Michigan employers in the post-war fate of "free enterprise" reflects a growing apprehension that the state — meaning government in general — may be forced into the employer's role of guaranteeing jobs and wages as an expedi-remedy for widespread unemployment.

For example, business groups in Detroit recently combined to sponsor a series of public lectures dealing with the future of management and labor. The theme was "free enterprise!"

Henry (Buck) Weaver of General Motors has described "free enterprise" as being "freedom to compete with one another in serving the public better." Behind the employer's apprehension that the post-war period may speed up the present drift toward state socialism is a strong fear of non-incentive controls and confiscatory taxation. This fear is linked to the public debt, now of staggering size, and the possibility of renewed public spending and continued deficits, both on a large scale.

As one observor put it the other day, what America needs most for the post-war period is more employers! The implications are tremendous, both economic and political.

Anticipating the return of peace, a large number of Michigan war workers have been buying small farms. The GI Bill of Rights allows liberal loans to veterans wanting to purchase farms.

The agricultural committee of the Michigan Planning commission recently reported that more farm land changed hands in Michigan in 1943 than in any previous year on record. About one-half of this land was purchased by city buyers.

That inflation in land prices is already here is shown by studies proving that many farms are being sold today at prices higher than the level justified by the farms' long-time earnings.

Getting security against a depression by buying farm land at inflated prices is, at the very best, a gamble. The soil may be inadequate for farming; soil fertility may be badly depleted; interest on a sizeable mortgage may force the owner, during an era of low farm prices, into unnecessary personal hardships.

Suggested controls for wartime land inflation, as proposed by Dean E. L. Anthony, school of agriculture at Michigan State college; P. J. Hoffmaster, director of the Michigan department of conservation, and Howard Nugent, speaker of the Michigan house of representatives:

(1) A public land appraisal service whereby a fair valuation of farm land could be determined.

(2) Loans on farms could be limited to 50 per cent of the "normal" value of farm land.

(3) Buyers could be required to obtain a permit before they could purchase a farm. This idea, drastic as it sounds, would safeguard a city buyer against purchasing land that was known by the county agricultural agent to be poor for farming. Farm buyers would have to certify that they had consulted an "official" land use map prior to entering into contract for purchase of farm land. Land speculators will fight this requirement.

(4) "Profits from the sale of farm land could be taxed on a graduated scale inverse to the length of time owned."

These facts are significant. Fifty-seven per cent of the decline in farm land prices during a 13-year period following 1920 came in 1921 and 1922.

This was due largely to non-support of farm food prices by the federal government as contrasted to the present policy of guaranteeing a price floor. The post-war cost of such a price guarantee would run about $2 billions a year —enough to stave off a depression.

Agriculture appears to be in much better shape to face the future than it was in 1920. Between 1914 and 1920, value of farm real estate rose from $39 to $66 billions, whereas farm mortgages grew from $4.7 to $8.4 billions.

Today, it appears that the value of farm real estate will have risen between 1939 and March, 1945, from $33.9 to $52 billions, while mortgage debt will have FALLEN from $6.8 to $5.2 billions. Note the difference!

The post-war prospect of agriculture is one of chronic surpluses (within two to five years after the surrender of Japan) and an excess of farm labor over actual needs due to increased farm mechanization or technology.

Our farms are going to produce more at less effort.

Farm earnings have been relatively good during the war; savings have been high; farm indebtedness is being reduced by thrifty-wise established farmers who remember the last depression.

That is why Michigan's agricultural leaders do not want a land boom.

This farm land inflation is one of the September trends in Michigan which foreshadow the coming of V-Day.

THREE SCHOOL PROPOSALS ARE TO BE VOTED ON THURSDAY EVENING

The following is a brief statement concerning the three proposals which will be voted upon by the people of the local school district on the evening of Thursday, September 14, 1944.

Further statements and explanations will be given out at the meeting on the night of the voting.

Proposal I

1. To raise the tax limitation for school purposes from 15 mills to 20 mills for a period of five years.

A. Explanation.

The reason for needing a raise in this limitation is to be able to levy a tax in case the School District needs more money for operational expenses of the school.

By raising of the limitation for a five-year period does not necessarily mean that the tax will be levied for 5 years. This proposal is only asking permission to raise the limitation for five years in case the District needs it. This means that an election will NOT have to be held each year.

Proposal II

1. This proposal is to levy a tax of 5 mills over the fifteen mill limitation for a period of 1 year.

A. Reason for the need of extra money.

The cost of maintaining a school has gone up the same as in most types of other businesses. Salaries have increased to keep pace with the increased cost of living.

However, the enrollment of the school has decreased and this is the item upon which our State Aid is based. This means that we will have less money from the State. Money that has been coming in from closed banks and from delinquent taxes will not be coming in to the treasurer. These different items plus teachers salaries, over the year 1943-44, show that we will not have within $10,000 to $12,000 enough money to run the school for the year 1944-45.

However, the Board is trying to help make up the deficit by having the outlying districts pay higher tuition rates and by changing to a Township Unit.

Proposal III

1. To change the Charlevoix Public School System from a Graded School District to a Township Unit District.

A. Explanation of reason for wanting such a change.

1. The Graded School District and the Township are what is known as being Co-terminus. This means that they have the same boundary lines. In the past, it has been the policy of the Board of Education to let students from the Charlevoix District No. 1 ride on the bus to and from school. Because this district is a Graded School District, it did not receive transportation reimbursement from the Department of Public Instruction.

Last year the cost of transportation per child amounted to $33.06.

There were 60 students from the Charlevoix District No. 1 riding on the buses. This means that the District lost $1,983.60. This amount is determined by dividing the cost of the use of the bus by the number of riders.

By changing to a Township Unit, the District will be reimbursed by the Department of Public Instruction for the students that ride on the bus from this District.

If the Change is voted, it will be necessary to elect a new Board of Education — under the supervision of the County Commissioner of Schools.

As far as the School District is concerned, there will be no other change what-so-ever.

Former Resident Passes Away Sunday

Mrs. Olive M. Smith, 61, wife of Joseph W. Smith, Central Lake business man and former Charlevoix resident, died at the Charlevoix hospital on Sunday, following several months of ill health. She had been a patient at the hospital for a week.

Olive M. Rice was born in Portland, Michigan, on August 12, 1883, and made her home there until coming to this vicinity as a young woman. She married Arthur Guihl about 1916 and they lived on a farm in Marion township. He preceeded her in death in 1936. In 1938 she married Mr. Smith, a former Norwood resident, and since then they have made their home in Central Lake, where they have operated a bakery. She was a member of the Church of God.

Surviving besides her husband are two daughters, Mrs. Katherine Logan, of Detroit and Mrs. Gertrude Miller, of Grosse Pointe Woods; two sons, Roswell and Clifton A., of Central Lake, and one sister, Mrs. Clarence Guildford, of Portland.

Funeral services were held at the Church of God at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon with the Rev. W. D. Wood, officiating. Interment was at the Brookside cemetery.

AT THE MOVIES

One of the favorite childhood memories of Bruce Kellogg was hiding away in his attic "clubroom" and reading "The Deerslayer" and other fabulous tales of James Fenimore Cooper.

When casting officials sought a typical frontiersman type to portray "Deerslayer" on the screen, Kellog was their unanimous choice. The picture will show at the Palace Theatre, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 19 and 20.

Fire Destroys Barn and Contents

Fire of an unknown cause completely destroyed the barn and its contents which included about 70 tons of hay on the Sam Gettleton farm, formerly known as the Paddock farm, on [illegible] 1, near Barnard, early Monday morning. The tenants, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence McClanaghan, were awakened about 1:30 a.m. and found the building in flames.

Finding it impossible to save the building, the Charlevoix Fire Department devoted its efforts to saving nearby buildings. Losses included several farm animals, more than a hundred chickens and guinea hens and a combine. Fire Chief Charles Marshall would not make an estimate of the loss, stated it was at least partially covered by insurance. Mr. and Mrs. Gettleton, owners of the farm reside in Detroit.

Local Girl Graduates From Hospital School

Miss Margery Edwards, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Edwards is a member of the graduating class of the Henry Ford Hospital School of Nursing, Detroit. The graduating exercises and reception will be held at the Educatina Building, Bethune avenue, at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, September 15.

Miss Edwards graduated from the Charlevoix high school and attended Michigan State college, in East Lansing, one year before entering training in September, 1941. After graduation she will remain at the Ford Hospital as a member of the nursing staff.

SCOUT EXECUTIVES RETURN FROM CONFERENCE

Bob Reeves, Field Executive of the Northern District, Scenic Trails Council, Boy Scouts of America, has just returned from a week's conference, St. John's Military Academy, Delafield, Wisconsin. This was the annual conference of the Scout Executives for Region 7 which includes Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana and Illinois. The highlight of the week's program was a talk and discussion given by Dr. E. K. Fretwell, Chief Scout Executive of the National Council. With starting of school the Scouts of the Northern District are getting started on their winter program and there are some new units in the process of organization. It appears that this will be an outstanding year for Scouts throughout the Scenic Trials Council.

LOCAL GIRL MARRIED LAST WEDNESDAY

Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Mitchell announce the marriage of their daughter, Joan, to Lieut. Arvil A. Poap, USAAF, at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening, August 30 at the Miami Beach Community church. The Rev. Frederick E. Poap, of Evanston, Ill., father of the bridegroom, read the single ring service before an altar banked with green palms, white gladioli and lighted branched candlebra.

Wearing a gown of bridal satin with shirred skirt and cathedral train and an heirloom rose point lace veil, the bride was given in marriage by her father. She carried a bouquet of orchids and stephanotis.

Ensign James Meyer, USNR, was best man and ushers were Ensigns John Cavanaugh, of Youngstown, O., and Edward D. Laville, of New York; Lt. Joseph Johnson, ATC, and Aviation Cadet Floyd Calhoon, of Dallas, Tex.

Mrs. Mitchell, the bride's mother, wore chartreuse Chantilly lace with an orchid corsage and chartreuse and orchid accessories. Mrs. Pamp, mother of the bridegroom, wore rose lace with matching accessories and an orchid corsage.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents following the ceremony.

The couple will make their home at San Antonio, Tex., where he is stationed at Brooks field. The bride is a former Charlevoix resident and has spent summers here since going to Miami Beach with her parents to make her home. The bridegroom, pilot of a Mitchell bomber, saw action over Sicily and Italy.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

Just as coming events cast their shadows ahead, so the approach of V-Day in Europe is precipitating currents of adjustment on the Michigan home front.

The Michigan Office of Civilian Defense is headed toward partial or complete disbandonment. Auditor General Vernon J. Brown has announced opposition to renewal of appropriations, holding that the period of emergency is over when enemy raids could be made.

Organized labor has been in green pastures. Financed by public debt, war contractors have paid lush overtime wages. Cutbacks in production will hasten a return to normal hour rates, now frozen by the Little Steel formula. Hence an organized campaign, led by the C.I.O. which is all-out for President Roosevelt, to win a White House nod for raising of the wage ceiling — probably after the November elections.

The arrival of Governor Thomas E. Dewey at Lansing last Saturday — Sept. 9 — is indication that Michigan is considered by Republican leaders to be a doubtful state. The Detroit News polls show a strong preference in Detroit and Wayne county for President Roosevelt. If this ratio prevails on election day, Dewey would have to roll up a majority upstate of around 250,000 votes to overcome the Roosevelt lead in metropolitan Detroit. Cockiness of Republican leaders is not justified by this study.

Roosevelt's lead in industrial centers was broken down by one poll (Columbia university bureau of applied research) to indicate a high preference among women in the lower income group for re-

MICHIGAN OUT-OF-DOORS

Playground News of Field and Stream

There will be as many locally-raised ducks for Michigan hunters during the first days of the 1944 season as last year, with the possibility that there may be a slight increase, according to conservation department game men. Ducks nesting in the state brought off a normal hatch this year and survival of the broods has been good. The season opens September 20.

Two bucks and five does were released on North Manitou Island in 1925 and by 1930 deer were common in all sections of the Island.

Transfer of hatchery-reared trout to suitable lakes in late October and November will wind up the conservation department's 1944 planting program. No more trout will be planted in Michigan streams this year but more legal-size fish will be transferred to streams in advance of the 1945 season. Bass and bluegill plantings are being completed now.

Rainfall over most of the state held last week's forest fire loss to 25 acres. Eight fires in the period are reported by the conservation department. Totals were smallest since the third week in June when three fires burned one acre. A total of 14,824 acres has been burned in 1,154 fires this year.

Fifty-eight per cent of the archers who hunted deer in Michigan during the 1943 season had never hunted with guns, and 29 per cent had hunted deer for the first time with bow and arrow.

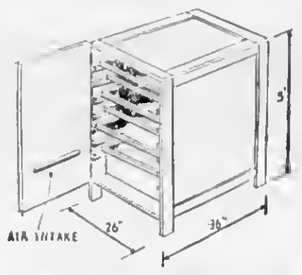
A Safe Dehydrator

HOME dehydration units for preserving food for winter have proved their value on many farms. Here are some suggestions for building a simple, safe dehydrator with few materials. According to the National Fire Protection Association and the National Safety Council, in order to be safe, dehydration equipment should be built of non-combustible materials. The unit illustrated below is built of fireproof asbestos cement board and can be heated either with light bulbs or an ordinary oil stove.



The construction of this dehydrator is an easy job, and the materials are readily available, since asbestos cement products are non-critical building materials.

The asbestos board is nailed to a light framework and the tray supports on the interior are held in place about 8½ inches apart by attaching them to the framework at each end. The trays are also made of asbestos board and are cut 24 inches square to permit turning them as needed during the drying operation. An opening similar to the one in the door should be made in the back at the top to provide an outlet for air circulation.

Politics Is Everyday Business of Woman Voter

Politics is your every day business—that is the way Mrs. Charles W. Weis, Jr., an assistant campaign director of women's activities in behalf of the Dewey-Bricker ticket, sums up the 1944 woman voter's responsibility.

Mrs. Weis practices what she preaches. Hard at work in the New York Republican Campaign Headquarters, Mrs. Weis makes every visitor, and every one of her thousands of correspondents the country over, sense her down-to-earth evaluation of politics "as every-day business."

She's New York State's National Committeewoman. She'll tell you most convincingly of Governor Dewey's notable qualifications for the presidency; likewise she will describe Governor Bricker's fitness for the vice presidency. But at the same time, she'll press upon you the urgency for being interested in politics, in knowing and talking about issues, about being a 100 percent voting citizen.

"American women have the greatest challenge in all history in this election," says Mrs. Weis, a personable mother of three, the eldest of whom is in the air corps overseas.

"We cannot afford to be passive or indifferent to passing events such as the threat of the Roosevelt-New Deal-CIO to purge the American Congress. American women must make politics an every day business, and keep it healthy and sound."

Not in the Book

By MART COLES

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

CORP. JIMMY KELLER walked briskly over to Sergeant Dikes. Now was the time to ask him, and even if the answer was no, well, you couldn't get ruled off for trying. Maybe all those hash marks on the sergeant's left sleeve didn't mean that he was as tough as most of the boys thought.

Jimmy was twenty-two, and a corporal of just three weeks. His blue denims bagged at the knees. Sergeant Dikes' uniform fitted him like the bark on the bluegum trees of the hillside where the artillery detachment was located. His face was rugged and bleak.

"I've been thinking, Sergeant, that the boys would be happier and do better work if we fixed up the camp a little."

"As how?" The older man's gray eyes roved over the scattered pup tents, the neat piles of barrack bags, and back to Jimmy. "Looks regulation. What's the matter with it?"

Jimmy gulped. Maybe it was dumb after all. The boys had said that the Sergeant would mow him down. But he would make the attempt anyway.

"What I mean is, the boys have about four free hours every day. If they want to read, they have to sit on the ground. We could make a table and a couple of benches; fix up a spot to pitch horseshoes."

When the sergeant spoke, the words came from one side of his mouth. "Corporal, when I was your age I had ideas too. Sometimes they worked, but mostly they didn't. And when they didn't, it was just too bad. So all I can say is this. Me, I go by the book. If it says so in the book, I do it. And if it doesn't say so in the book, I don't do it. You asked me, and I'm telling you. I won't say yes, and I won't say no. That's all, Corporal."

"What did the top say, Jimmy? May we?" About fifteen were crowded around the corporal.

"He didn't say yes, and he didn't say no," said Jimmy wryly. "He didn't even say maybe," he added with a grin. "But if you fellows will help I'll go ahead."

"If the old man doesn't like it he'll break you back to private," said Sam Johnson.

"Make it an order, Jimmy," brightly suggested somebody. "Then if the brass hats don't like it we'll be in the clear." Jimmy joined in the laugh that followed.

"Let's go," said Sam Johnson. "But remember, if there's a beef, you take it."

"I'll take it," said Jimmy. He looked at the chevrons on his sleeve. Six months to earn those two bits of cloth, and now he might lose them!

The material arrived the next day. The obliging landowner had driven his truck to the lumber yard and delivered it himself with eight large horseshoes, just the right size and weight to pitch. By sunset the rough table, two benches and four chairs were finished and placed. Stakes had been driven and two horseshoe courts marked out.

At four p. m. two days later, most of the boys were off duty until seven. Three sat at the table writing letters. Sam Johnson and others were on the courts. All the chairs were occupied. Jimmy had just repacked his bag when he heard a challenge from the sentry at the camp entrance. Then the colonel's big gray car rolled past the guard and stopped within ten feet of Jimmy.

The colonel walked toward the table. Sergeant Dikes followed at regulation distance, his face expressionless. After what seemed an hour to Jimmy the Colonel spoke. "Who is responsible for these, ah—shall we say improvements?"

Jimmy stepped forward one pace and saluted: "I am, sir."

The Colonel looked at the others. "Anyone else accountable?" No one answered. "Very well, Sergeant, take the corporal's name." He turned to Jimmy. "I like the right kind of enterprise in the men of my command. These conveniences meet with my approval. Corporal, you will be acting sergeant from now on." To Sergeant Dikes he said, "Make a note of that, Sergeant."

As Jimmy watched Dikes "make a note of it" he saw him close one eye. And what was intended for a smile played for a moment about Sergeant Dikes' lips.

Nobody Pays—Except You!

The director of a large federally financed electric undertaking recently was asked: "Do you include interest on the investment in calculating your costs?"

"No, interest is not included. We pay no interest," the bureaucrat replied. "The U. S. Treasury paid the interest."

In other words, only the poor taxpayer pays—and pays—and pays.

Wire Straightener

SOME of the "scarce" items needed on farms are more plentiful now, but farmers still can't buy fencing, baling wire, and several other items just any day despite the increased production. The re-use of baling wire is still necessary in order to save metal needed for war production.

To save and straighten bale wire [illegible] been developed by the experts at Purdue

University. It consists of a small viso and a lever with a barn door hook screwed into it. These are mounted on opposite ends of a work bench or a 2x6 plank, 10 feet long. As shown in the illustration, the lever is hinged and is placed with the side holding the hook toward the vise.

In order to straighten a piece of wire, simply hook the loop of wire over the hook on the lever and fasten the straight end of the wire in the vise. A slight pull on the lever then will straighten the wire so it can be used again. To prevent waste, when bales of hay or straw are opened, the wire should be untied instead of being cut.

W. H. WALLACE

Back to Elm Street, U. S. A.

Back from the business of killing — to the business of living!

Back from scenes of hatred, despair and destruction to a homeland of peace, hope and opportunity!

Millions of young Americans are coming back to thousands of farms — to thousands of peaceful Elm Streets in every city, town and village of America!

They've made up their minds to a lot of things while they've been away.

They've seen the suffering of homeless terrorized families — people who have lost their self-respect, their hope, their health — everything.

They've seen a large part of the world in ruins, because a few fanatical men sold "gold bricks" to millions of people who traded in their freedom for promises of security — for brightly painted pictures of a "planned economy" under an all-wise, all-powerful government.

And they want no part of that sort of thing here in America.

They want jobs. They want to plan their own lives. Make their own futures. Go places under their own power.

And we must give them that opportunity.

But to do it, wartime restrictions and controls must be removed from agriculture, business — and the individual citizen — as quickly as possible.

Farmers must be free to plant what they want, and as much as they want — without needless bureaucratic supervision.

Taxes must be adjusted so that money will be available to finance the change-over to peacetime production.

Greater incentives must be provided, so that workers can make more money, by making more goods for more people.

Mr. Private Citizen must be allowed to make money — and be free to invest it in business ventures of his own — or of others.

Prosperity has always come to America through the growth of production — not its restriction — on farms and in factories.

Profitable production will make jobs for the boys who are coming back. But business, labor, agriculture and an understanding government must work together to create it — hold it — and increase it.

GOOD NEWS FOR BUSINESS MEN

The post-war world will see a tremendous growth of small business in America. One of the major problems will be credit. The American Bankers Association, of which we are a member, has just established a new Post-War Small Business Credit Commission to mobilize the credit facilities of banks for this purpose. Planless Planners

GLIMPSES

"Here it comes—there it goes" can be said of the machinery desperately needed by American farmers if they are to keep up the burden of feeding America, her allies, and the conquered nations.

The optimistic statement to the Senate that American farmers are "seeing" the farm machinery they need brought forth the information that most of the machinery "seen" by North Dakota farmers is going past them on the way to Canada, Russia, New Zealand, Australia, England and Africa.

One North Dakota farmer told of seeing six carloads of combines and three tractors passing his farm by rail in one week bound for Canada, while the entire northwest is being forced to curtail food production by lack of farm implements.

EGGS ON THE MARCH

This is the saga of 108,000 dozen eggs—and a New Deal bureau.

Back last May, the War Food Administration purchased the eggs in Minnesota, ostensibly for war purposes. The eggs were shipped to Cleveland, apparently to be sent into dry warehouse storage.

But the eggs were transferred to an egg-breaking establishment in Missouri. (No cracks, please). From there, the eggs (still not broken) were shipped to Omaha, and from thence back to St. Paul, from whence they had departed several months before.

They were sent from St. Paul to Chicago, where the Illinois Department of Agriculture caught up with them, decided something ought to be done about these eggs. They had become bad eggs, so the Illinois department official placed a seizure order against them. At last reports, the state officials were awaiting Washington approval to do away with these eggs.

It only cost $4,200 in freight charges to send the eggs on their cross-country joyride.

THE CRYSTAL BALL

"In order to preserve their independence the people must not let our rulers load them with perpetual debt. . .

"We must make our choice between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. . . . A departure from principle in one instance becomes a precedent for a second; that second for a third; and so on, till the bulk of the society is reduced to be mere automatons of misery. . . . The fore horse of this frightful team is public debt. Taxation follows that, and in its train wretchedness and oppression. . . ."

So wrote Thomas Jefferson in a letter to Samuel Kercheval in 1816.

OCD IS NEEDED UNTIL END OF WAR, GOVERNOR STATES

With the war in Europe believed to be rapidly nearing its climax, Governor Harry F. Kelly has outlined a policy for the continuation of Civilian Defense in Michigan until final victory is also won in the Pacific, but with streamlining of the state staff to the minimum necessary to carry on only essential operations.

"We have not reached the point where the entire program can be abolished," the Governor said. "Until victory, certainly we aren't going to abandon some phases, particularly at the local level.

"We will make economies that can be made at the State level, but we are not taking the position that we don't need the OCD. Every effort will be made to reduce personnel at the state office and every curtailment that can be made there will be made."

Certain activities, such as salvage and Victory Gardens, may be necessary not only for the duration of the war, but perhaps for some time thereafter, the Governor said. He also said that Civilian Defense fire and police units must be maintained.

"Another example is the investigation made last year in connection with the coal shortage," Governor Kelly stated. "Michigan was complimented on the way this task was handled. A similar situation can arise again.

"Michigan has done a marvelous job on civilian defense, both on the State and local levels. We certainly don't want the public to get the idea we are disbanding the program at either level. Local units particularly should stand by until the war is over."

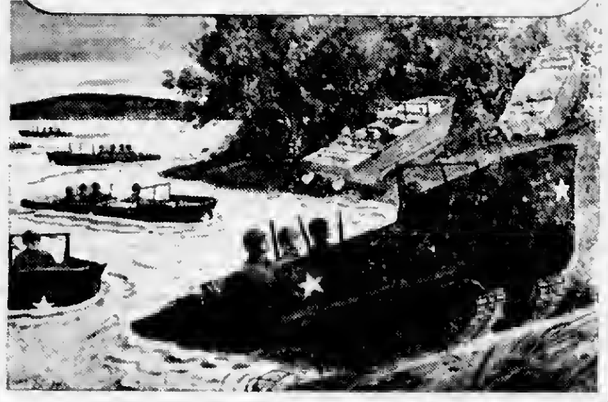
Governor Kelly's statement followed a conference with Capt. Donald S. Leonard, State Civilian Defense Director, on how the State office could be made "more compact." Leonard is now preparing a report on recommended operations in view of the war situation.

Civilian Defense in Michigan was established in 1941, and at one time had 117 employes. For the last year a policy of retrenchment has been followed and the payroll today contains 54 names, including the staff of the State Civil Air Patrol, an Army auxiliary which is supported from the OCD budget, and the water supply protection service in the Detroit Metropolitan Area. Both the U. S. Citizens Defense Corps Protective Service and the Civilian War Service programs of OCD also have been revised to eliminate activities no longer regarded as essential, and further modification is planned as war conditions permit. The basic organization, however, will be maintained to meet any war problems and natural disaster emergencies on the home front.

Pilchard Catch

A considerable portion of the pilchard catch is reduced to oil and meal. The meal is used in the manufacture of poultry feed to provide the indispensable animal protein, and the oil, which is a source of vitamin D, is also used to fortify feed and has many industrial uses. Production of meal this year was 76,032 tons, compared with 71,828 tons in 1942-43, and oil production was 14,301,253 gallons, as against 12,508,958.

Amazing new war vehicle travels in water ...glides like a ghost over swamp or sand



Army's latest Weasel M-29C

Built by Studebaker and powered by famous Studebaker Champion engine

HERE'S a brand-new example of the teamwork of the Office of Scientific Research and Development, the War Department and Studebaker engineers... It's the latest model of the Army's versatile track-laying vehicle known as the Weasel... This new M29C is just as much at home in water as it is on sand, mud, swamp or solid ground... It not only propels itself in deep water, fully loaded, but it also clambers up and down steep, slippery banks with amazing ease... This new Weasel is built by Studebaker under contract with the Ordnance Department, Army Service Forces. It adds another unit of war equipment to a Studebaker list that includes aircraft engines and war trucks.

WEED PROBLEMS CAN BE SOLVED

Two major steps that will go a long way in the control of weeds are at the disposal of every farmer. One is the avoiding of the habit of planting weed seeds with the crops; the other the overcoming of the attitude of indifference towards weeds that are already on the farm.

The first problem can be solved easily by more universal use of a good fanning mill. Above all, the time to think about planting clean seed is during the preplanting period. The second problem, like all phases of weed control, depends more upon the man than the method.

The battle against weeds should be an incessant one on every farm. Unfortunately like fleas on dogs, weeds on farms are seldom molested until they become intolerable. Generally, there are several acres of kindweed on the farm before it is noticed. By that time the difficulties of eradication have been multiplied. Weeds can steal a portion of every crop, and there is little protest. If a human thief did as much, the owner would immediately be up in arms.

Clean out small areas before they become large ones, is a motto well worth adopting.

CAN FRUIT WITHOUT SUGAR IF NECESSARY

Don't put off canning Michigan's bountiful harvest of peaches and other late fruit because of possible shortage of sugar. Unsweetened peaches, pears, or apples will keep equally well as sweetened fruit, provided the same care in processing is exercised.

The amount of sugar normally present in canned fruit does not act as a preservative, but serves chiefly to help retain the shape, color and flavor of the fruit.

If there is not enough natural juice present to cover the fruit in the jars, crush some of the same kind of fruit in order to extract sufficient liquid. This will provide a canned product of better flavor than if water alone is used to cover the fruit.

New Sidings Over Old

IF YOU are worried about the deterioration of the siding on your home or service buildings—if the boards have loosened in the wind and the paint is peeled and blistered—here's a tip that certainly will interest you.

There are no restrictions on the use of non-critical asbestos cement shingles and sidings for making these repairs. If any part of the siding on a building is in need of repair or painting, the entire building may be completely sided with fireproof asbestos products without special application.

The government not only approves but urges farmers to make necessary repairs with non-critical supplies. And you are really helping the war effort when you take a "stitch in time" and thus possibly prevent the necessity for more extensive repairs.

RESTAURANTS TO EMPHASIZE CAN COLLECTION

Cooperation of Michigan's restaurants in the tin can salvage drive has been assured the State Salvage Committee of the Michigan Office of Civilian Defense, according to Kenneth M. Burns, chairman. The 100,000 members of the National Restaurant Association, comprising 85 per cent of the nation's restaurants, are acting to increase the salvage, Burns said.

Though restaurants have been cooperating in the drive, full participation of the association has been pledged in response to an appeal by the War Production Board.

The critical shortage of tin was emphasized in a message to Burns from Louis S. Loeb, Chief of the Tinned Scrap section of the WPB General Salvage Branch, Washington, who warned that actual collections have rarely passed 50 per cent of the monthly quota of 40,000 tons. Even the end of the war in Europe will not eliminate present shortages, he stated.

LARGER 4-H SHOW DESPITE DROUGHT

Michigan 4-H club boys and girls haven't permitted the summer drought to hamper their food production projects. That fact was definitely demonstrated at the annual 4-H club show at Michigan State college September 5 to 8, where vegetable and farm crop displays were on a quality standard not below that of previous normal rainfall years.

This year's show surpassed all others in size in virtually all departments. Additional tents were necessary to house the huge influx of livestock, estimated to value at least $150,000. Approximately 3,000 members were present from nearly every county in the state to participate in contest and place exhibits.

The huge livestock show and the plentiful exhibits of vegetables, grain crops, sewing, cooking, preserving, and handicraft were proof enough that the majority of Michigan 4-H members are living up to the slogan "Food a Fighter in '44."

This year's beef cattle department was nearly twice as large as last year, and despite the unfavorable feed ratio the swine entries were somewhat larger than in 1943. A substantial increase in dairy cattle also was noted.

A new feature this year was the display arranged by the Military Department of Michigan State college. Much of the equipment used for training and in battle was on exhibit.

T-B ASSOCIATION REPORTS FINDINGS

The Michigan Tuberculosis Association reports the following findings in the x-ray clinic held in July for Beaver Island.

The summary of the clinic shows that six persons under 20 years have primary type tuberculosis. There was one out-patient re-examination and one for whom a re-ray was recommended. Thirty persons have been x-rayed in Beaver Island. Twelve were x-rayed for the first time and 18 have been x-rayed previously. The findings have been sent to the family physician of each person x-rayed. The people x-rayed have been notified of the findings by the County Health Unit.

The use of tuberculin test of the apparently healthy, and an x-ray of the positive reactors, is the best known method of determining early tuberculosis.

The Michigan Tuberculosis Association has long been sponsoring an early diagnosis campaign, as the disease is more easily curable if found early.

It is highly desirable that all fiberboard boxes be securely wrapped in heavy paper, if available, as experience has shown that boxes with no outer wrapper often become crushed or split, thus allowing the contents to escape.

"Contents should be packed tightly, in order that the articles may not become loosened in transit, damaging the contents or the covering of the parcels. Hard candies, nuts, caramels (including those covered with chocolate), fruit cake, and chocolate bars individually wrapped in waxed paper should be enclosed in inner boxes of wood, metal, or cardboard. Soft candies, whether homemade or commercial, do not carry well and should not be mailed. "Addresses must be legible, in typewriting or ink. Copies of sales slips of retail stores should not be used as address labels. MICHIGAN HEALTH NEWS

More than 200,000 bulletins and school health record forms were distributed by the Michigan Department of Health during August. Much of this material is for use of teachers and was mailed directly to schools or to local health officers who in turn will distribute it to teachers in their districts.

Subjects of these health pamphlets vary from infant care to disease prevention, from meal planning to protecting public water supplies. Especially popular with teachers are the record forms for the cumulative health record of pupils, on which the child's condition and progress may be recorded each school year.

The total number of deaths in the state declined three per cent for the first six months with 28,116 deaths reported against 29,056 for the same period last year.

'PAPER TROOPERS' IN SCHOOL TO AID SALVAGE CAMPAIGN

With the opening of schools, Michigan children will be banded together as "Paper Troopers" in a state-wide waste paper campaign under the sponsorship of local salvage committees, the State Salvage Committee of the Michigan Office of Civilian Defense announces.

Materials have been ordered by cooperating school officials to cover more than 3,000 schools and teachers. It is expected that nearly 85 per cent of the school children in Michigan will participate in the program during the year.

A distinctive "P.T." armband, designating the pupil as a "Paper Trooper", will be given to all participants. Advancement in rank for attaining waste paper collection quotas or for winning school room, school or district contests will be denoted by the award of chevrons. Certificates of merit are to be issued schools and individual pupils for outstanding records.

Householders are to be asked to sign pledge cards to save paper and have it ready for collection. A record sheet and a set of instructions on how to prepare paper will be left at each home.

Gas Conservation

Much gasoline can be saved by avoiding racing the engine and choking it excessively during the warm-up period, and by starting and stopping the car smoothly. Quick acceleration is wasteful whether in starting or driving along. Other gas-conserving measures include keeping speed moderate, shutting off the engine when stopping for a few minutes, keeping tire pressure up to par and the carburetor in proper order, having valves ground, carbon removed, and worn piston rings replaced.

Save Critical Lumber

NEW rules by which the farmer may obtain lumber for necessary building and repair are now in effect. They are part of lumber control plan L-335, which went into operation August 1 and put the nation's entire lumber output on a strictly controlled allotment basis.

Certificates for the purchase of needed lumber will be issued by county AAA committees. Each state and county is allocated a definite quarterly quota.

Because of the critical shortage of lumber which has made this control necessary, county committees have been instructed to urge farmers to obtain lumber from their own or neighbors' wood lots whenever possible.

The committees also are insisting that other less critical materials be used wherever possible. These include such products as asbestos cement board, asbestos shingles and sidings, tile, brick, concrete, insulating board and others.

Farmers need have no hesitancy about using these time-tested materials. Many have advantages particularly suited for farm purposes. Asbestos products, for example, are fireproof and weatherproof. They save money and time because they require practically no maintenance.

Western Aspect

Odessa, Russia, was built by order of Catherine the Great, about the time Washington, D. C., was founded. Like Washington, it was constructed largely on reclaimed swampland and wilderness after plans made by a Frenchman. The first leaders of the new municipality were either western Europeans or were English-educated and gave to Odessa an occidental aspect unknown to other Russian cities.

PEACH HARVEST AT PEAK, HOME CANNERS TOLD

Housewives who plan to can peaches to meet family requirements are advised that the Michigan crop is expected to reach the market in greatest volume and at lowest prices this week and next.

"Harvest of the Elberta, delayed a few days by recent rains, is being pushed this week, with fruit of fair size and excellent quality being offered at reasonable prices," said C. Wall, vice-president of A & P Food Stores, one of the nation's leading buyers of fresh fruit. "Demands of war agencies for canned peaches are such that only through home canning can a housewife be assured of a sufficient supply for her family."

Agricultural experts have estimated the Michigan crop at about 2,000,000 bushels, with estimates being revised upward because of recent rainfall.

"Prospects for one of the largest crops on record were cut sharply by dry weather during the summer," said Dr. T. A. Merrill, research associate at Michigan State College. "Late rain is swelling the fruit to fair size, however, and total volume may approach last year's 2,150,000 bushels."

Although the size of the fruit is smaller than normal, the sugar content is unusually high. Which should contribute to the quality of the home-canned product.

The harvest peak is expected to continue through September 16, with fair supplies reaching the market the following week.

"DAIRY BARN GUTTER CLEANER"

Fifteen years ago Martin H. Geerlings, Route 3, Holland, Mich. decided that the old laborious method of hand-cleaning the dairy barn could be improved upon. So he put his head to work and devised Michigan's first dairy barn gutter cleaner.

That machine worked so successfully that it is still in use on the Geerlings farm and has proved to be the worthy ancestor of many other cleaners that are now saving hours of back-breaking labor—labor that cannot be obtained—on Michigan dairy farms.

Most any farmer can duplicate the Geerlings gutter cleaner by the use of scrap materials found about the farm, or his neighbor's farms. Total cost of the home-made contrivance was only about $75. Upkeep consists of replacing the gutter chain about every seven years at a cost of about $15.

The conveyor itself is made of ¾ inch log chain with fence post slats 24 inches apart. Geerlings used an old mower as the reduction unit, driving from a gasoline engine to the pitman balance wheel, with the apron drum fastened to one end of the mower axle.

Use of dairy barn gutter cleaners is being encouraged by Michigan State College engineering extension specialists, who point out that they not only save labor but improve sanitation and encourage daily hauling of manure to the fields, thus maintaining and improving the soil.

DDT INSECTICIDE IS NOT AVAILABLE

No supplies of DDT, the much publicized new insecticide, are available for civilian use.

Despite some of the glowing accounts of panacea-like qualities of DDT, the compound is not a universal remedy for all insect problems plaguing farmers, gardeners, and home makers. It is simply a valuable addition to the list of insecticides.

So far, tests have shown DDT to be useful in controlling various types of common flies, yellow jackets, cabbage worms, oriental fruit moths, and leafhoppers. Even though the material kills flies and mosquitoes readily, unfortunately such useful insects as bees are also killed.

Chief advantages of DDT, as revealed by preliminary tests, are that it is non-toxic to plants and can be readily mixed for use in spraying.

Entomologists at Michigan State college are now conducting experiments with DDT to determine its possibilities in controlling such pests as roaches, rose chafers and ants. No results are yet available. Before widespread use of the compound can be recommended, the possibility of its causing harm to man and animals must also be thoroughly investigated.

RECORD OF THE COUNCIL

SEPTEMBER 11, 1944

The Common Council of the City of Charlevoix met in Special Session on the above date with Mayor Bridge presiding.

Aldermen present: Bellinger, Erber, Goss, Hooker, Nettleton and Ochs.

Alderman Erber offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, supported by Alderman Goss.

BE IT RESOLVED by the Common Council of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, that whereas the death of Bernard J. Foster, while in the performance of his duty with the armed forces of the United States of America, has taken from this City, one of it's finest young men, who, the citizens of Charlevoix knew, would render whole-hearted, honest and honorable service to his country in its fight for the freedom of the people of the world, and which service has been cut short while he was yet in prime of life, bringing home to the citizens of Charlevoix in one sharp blow the seriousness of the conflict being waged;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Common Council, on behalf of the citizens of Charlevoix, express to the bereaved family our honest and sincere sorrow and sense of deep loss in the death of their husband, father, son and brother; and that we further convey our heartfelt sympathy and consolation to them in their hour of darkness.

RESOLVED FURTHER that a transcript of this Resolution be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

Adopted by unanimous vote of the Council on this 11th day of September, A. D. 1944.

On motion the Council adjourned.

Hog Barriers

THERE'S an old saying that "a hog doesn't know much about Sunday." He evidently doesn't know much about the wartime restrictions on travelling either. Sunday, Monday, or any day, he's on the lookout for a chance to roam.

To keep your hogs in their own pasture, and yet allow horses and cattle to run in and out, try this barrier. Nail a few heavy boards securely to the fence posts which are on each side of the opening to a height of about eighteen inches. Then set two short posts inside the hog pasture about eighteen inches from this barrier, and nail boards to these to form a second barrier.

The size of your hogs may make it necessary to build the barrier a little higher, so it's a good idea to set posts long enough to hold an additional strip. However, the eighteen inch height usually is sufficient.

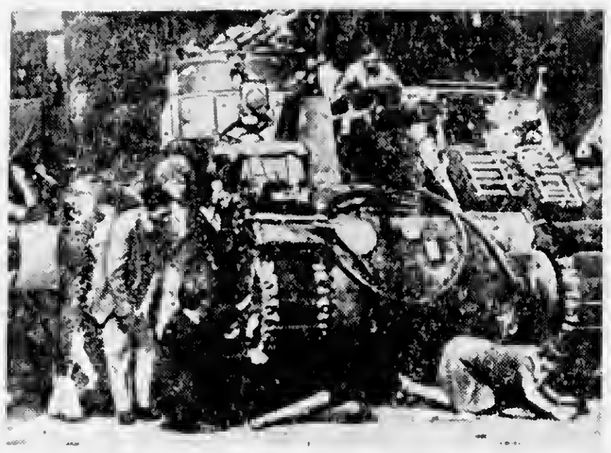
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Germans Shorten Lines on East, West Fronts for Suicide Stand; Coal Production Tops 1943 Rate

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



Marring liberation of Paris was internal strife, which broke out at famed Notre Dame cathedral, with Axis snipers firing on Parisian crowd, shown seeking refuge behind French tanks.

EUROPE:
Head for Reich

Giving in before the overwhelming weight of the advancing Allied armies, Nazi troops in the Paris region fell back toward the German frontier, while remnants of enemy units in southern France trickled northward to join in the evacuation of the country.

Although the Germans claimed to have withdrawn the bulk of their Seventh army eastward, the Allies exacted a heavy toll from it, with U. S. and British armored columns hacking up rearguards and fleets of bombers ripping up enemy troops making a hasty scramble for the reich border.

As the U. S. columns swept on, such historic World War I battle-fields as Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood and Soisson fell to rampaging Doughboys after little resistance. In marked contrast to the bitter, bloody fighting which was required 25 years ago before the Allies could plant their flags over the ground.

In southern France, the Allies advanced almost at will, encountering fanatical resistance only at certain strong-points, and indicating that the Germans had pulled out the bulk of their forces from this section of the country before Lieut. Gen. Alexander Patch's Seventh army landed between Toulon and Cannes. Even so, the bag of enemy prisoners totaled well over 45,000, although many of these troops were foreigners the Nazis had impressed into service.

Enter Hungary

Even as the Nazis streamed back to their own borders in the west, their armies were sorely pressed in the east, where German divisions trapped in Rumania tried to fight themselves free, and other of their troops moved up to the Carpathian mountains to attempt to stave off the Russian advance into Hungary.

In moving into the Carpathians, the Germans fulfilled an agreement with the Hungarians to provide troops for that country's defense as the price for keeping it in the war, following Rumania's capitulation to the Allies and Bulgaria's peace bid.

For herself, Hungary sought to solidify her internal government by establishing a new cabinet, composed for the most part of military strong men, headed by Col. Gen. Vitez Geza Lakots.

As G many tried to hold Hungary in line Russian troops were reported well inside the Carpathians, with the enemy energetically attempting to contain the Red drive in the rocky masses.

Nazi Predicament

With the full weight of Allied might falling down on Germany, the Nazi predicament became severely acute, with the enemy himself seemingly pulling in his troops in both the west and east for a final suicidal stand on shortened lines, hoping for a possible compromise peace.

Addressing the German people over the radio, Lieut. Gen. Kurt Dittmar, the army's press spokesman, sounded the keynote to Nazi hopes, declaring that they would be willing to cease fighting if the Allies relaxed their war aims.

Said he: "If this determination (to destroy Germany) did not exist, if the world we face had been ready, . . to recognize the living rights of a great . . . hard working nation, no reason could have been seen why this misery had to fill the world . . and will continue to fill it."

COAL:
Good Supplies

With coal output averaging 12,000,000 tons weekly, the industry looked forward confidently to the achievement of the production goal of 025,000,000t tons for 1944.

Mining of the 625,000,000 tons would assure the nation of a comfortable fuel supply, but due to wartime complications, many regions unable to obtain certain types of coal and may be forced to rely upon neighboring sources.

Up to the middle of August, U. S. miners had turned out 401,000,000 tons of coal, for a gain of 29,000,000 tons over a year ago. With rosy prospects prevailing, the government recently assured dealers that there would be no further reduction of quotas for retail deliveries.

PRODUCTION:
New Labor Demands

No less than 400,000 workers are needed to meet the services' revised production demands based upon battle experiences in France and Italy, with the shipbuilding and artillery and ammunition industries alone calling for 176,000 employees.

To meet the new labor demands, the War Manpower commission planned to transfer workers from other jobs, even though they may be drawn from activities hitherto considered essential.

Besides the shipbuilding and artillery and ammunition fields, 57,000 workers are required in the lumber industry; 45,200 in food processing through September; 22,000 in electronics; 16,000 in tire-making; 10,200 in truck and tank foundries and forges, and 4,600 monthly in cotton duck production.

PACIFIC:
MacArthur's Strategy

With Gen. Douglas MacArthur's ambition to return to the Philippines closer to realization, military experts at South Pacific headquarters declared that pursuit of his favorite tactics could lead to conquest of the islands with a minimum cost of lives.

General MacArthur

In recalling General MacArthur's strategy in isolating the enemy on New Guinea, experts pointed out that his tactics consisted chiefly of loring the enemy out of position, then striking his weakest points, and using the jungle as a shield for maneuvers.

Continuing efforts to soften up the enemy's defensive system in the Philippines area, U. S. army and navy bombers hammered at enemy shipping and installations.

MEAT:
Light Marketings

With hog receipts at low levels, and with packers ordered to set aside one-third of production for the government, pork supplies promise to remain tight until late in October, when the usual heavy seasonal run is expected to ease the situation.

Although the short hog supply is expected to be offset by increased shipments of cattle, movement of the latter to market has been slower than anticipated, with the result that the plainer grades have commanded strong prices.

As a result of the tight supply, hogs have been netting ceiling prices, with the market expected to remain firmer than last year when the heavy runs get under way.

COTTON:
Future Scanned

With cotton accounting for one-fifth of the nation's cash farm income, and with southern cotton states embracing more than one-third of the country's population, attention has been focused on the future of the commodity once the record breaking demands of the war end.

Even as Sen. John H. Bankhead (Ala.) fights now for wartime parity for cotton, apprehension has been voiced over the possibility of a big postwar slump in prices, not only affecting the producers themselves but northern industry and labor as well.

In studying the postwar cotton situation, the Guaranty Trust Company of New York opined that partial solution of the problem may lie in price concessions, increased production, tariff adjustments, reliance on foreign credits and the extension of subsidies.

Industrial research and intensive trade promotion also might contribute to strengthening cotton's market position, it was said.

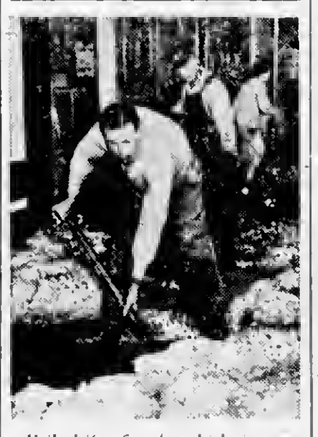
SMOKES:
Brighter Prospects

With increased tobacco supplies in view and an early end to the war relieving the manpower situation, the outlook for increased cigarette production brightened.

Prospects for a 950,000,000-pound flue-cured tobacco crop for 1944-'45 promised to allow manufacturers to set aside larger stocks for aging and release more matured supplies. With cutbacks in military production resulting in labor layoffs, many former cigarette plant workers are expected to return to their old jobs, easing the tight manpower situation in those establishments.

The cigarette shortage, which has placed smokers on a day-to-day basis for many weeks, should reach its peak in September, the trade reported.

Dig Out of Hail



Hail drifts five feet high in some places, with some stones as large as golf balls, marked the severe hailstorm which struck Colorado, causing 1½ million dollars damage to cities and farms. In Pueblo, merchants are shown digging out of drifts before stores.

PUBLIC HEALTH:
Fitness Sought

With selective service's rejection of 4,000,000 men revealing the slow health level of the population, effort will be made to improve the situation through a nation-wide physical fitness program, which will be launched this fall in schools and colleges and later extended to industry and the general public.

Under leadership of the Joint Committee on Physical Fitness, no less than 364 national organizations are taking part in the program, with goals including: protection against preventable defects, correction of existing deficiencies, knowledge of how to live healthfully, and provision of adequate means for physical development.

In commenting on the program, Col. Leonard G. Rowntree, chief of selective service's medical division and chairman of the Joint Committee on Physical Fitness, declared: "We need to develop people with stamina, energy, skill and agility, so they may have a fuller enjoyment of life."

CIO:
Probe Political Action

Called before the house campaign expenditures committee, CIO Chieftain Sidney Hillman revealed that the organization's political action committee spent $428,397 up to August 15, with $67,320 of the sum used in primaries and state elections.

Vigorously denying that workers were forced to kick in to the political action committee, Hillman said that the bulk of total collections of $806,715 constituted union contributions, with loans figuring prominently in the remainder of the funds. An additional $1,500,000 is being sought from workers, Hillman reported.

DRIED VEGETABLES

About 95 per cent of the dehydrated vegetable output will go to the army, navy, Red Cross and other "non-civilian" agencies, the War Food administration announces. Based on an estimated allocable supply of 277,000,000 pounds of dried vegetable products, this means that 265,000,000 pounds will be sent to the military and indirect war service agencies, and that about 12,000,000 pounds will go to civilians.

Production is expected to be about 67 per cent higher than 1943.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

FOOD MANUFACTURERS: Profits of food manufacturing companies declined in the first half of the year, the Grocery Manufacturers of America reported. A dip of 4.5 per cent was the average for the industry, the comparison being with the preceding six months. Higher costs of raw material, labor and other expenses, principally higher taxes, more than offset gains.

STEAKS: After September 4, butchers will be allowed to cube or tenderize top and bottom cuts of utility grade beef steak before putting it on sale. Heretofore this could be done only by request of and in the presence of the customer. The OPA has relaxed its ruling to make utility beef which is so plentiful supply "more acceptable to the customer."
